Congressional Record

SEVENTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 5, 1937

Under authority of the twentieth amendment to the Constitution of the United States the 5th of January having been appointed by law (Public Res. 120, 74th Cong., 2d sess.) for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

JOHN N. GARNER, of Texas, Vice President of the United States, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following

PRAYER

Master of all things and Lord of love, in whom we live and move and have our being: fill our souls with a sense of Thy sheltering care and quicken our energies into newness of life as again we respond to Thy call.

Grant, we beseech Thee, to our President, Vice President, the Members of the Congress and all who hold office in our land, wisdom and strength to know and to do Thy will, and whatsoever else of Thy bounty shall be needful for the fulfillment of their duty as leaders of men and exemplars of the nobler virtues.

Let this be a day of rededication on the part of every Member and officer of the Senate to the highest and holiest things of life, to the love of God and country and to the service of our fellow men.

Give to our Nation the will to peace, that, scorning all lesser aims, we may, in the spirit of utter selflessness, share with each other not only what we have but what we are through the enabling of Thy love. We ask it in the name of Him who is the Prince of Peace, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Thou who hast endowed us with marvelous faculties of mind and soul, let in a flood of light upon the deeper meaning of our high calling. Crown us with courage, zeal, and fidelity that we may be of the company of those immortals who live in lives made better. Forgive, O Lord, our selfish joys and our selfish sorrows and inspire us to consecrate our best selves to all that is worthy. We most fervently pray that our President may be attended by Thy grace, mercy, and truth. Let Thy spirit come mightily and with rich blessings upon our Speaker and every Member of Congress that they may be guided by the highest conceptions of right and duty. Be pleased to regard in divine favor all officials and employees. Lord God of Hosts, speak Thou to the nations in Thy wrath and vex them with Thy sore displeasure. Stay Thou the blows and the flames that fill the cup of the world's sufferings. O come richly and abundantly to our own beloved homeland with a new voice and with a much-needed accent, and let there be a tremendous surging of peace and brotherhood in the very soul of the Republic. Make it rich in happy homes, wise statesmanship, and a boundless faith in an infinite God and in His Son, Jesus Christ, our Savior. Amen.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"

Bankhead	Schneider, Wis.	Snell

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tally. The total number of votes cast is 421, of which Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD has received 324 votes and Hon. BERTRAND H. SNELL has received 83 votes; Hon. GEORGE J. SCHNEIDER has received 10 votes and Hon. FRED L. CRAWFORD 2 votes. Three Members vote "present." Therefore, Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, a Representative-elect from the State of Alabama, having received a majority of all of the votes cast, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Seventy-fifth Congress.

The gentleman from New York, Mr. SNELL; the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. SCHNEIDER; the gentleman from New York, Mr. O'CONNOR; and the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. STEAGALL, will please conduct the Speaker-elect to the chair.

PRESENTATION OF THE SPEAKER-ELECT

The committee appointed by the Clerk escorted Mr. BANKHEAD to the chair.

Mr. SNELL. Members of the Seventy-fifth Congress, it is my high privilege and honor at this time to present your newly elected Speaker. In my judgment, there is no higher legislative position in the gift of the American people. No man ever rises to this position by mere chance and accident. It is the result of long, hard work and experience in the House of Representatives. He must also prove to his colleagues that he has the ability, character, and sound judgment to well administer the tedious, exacting duties of Speaker of this House.

Mr. Speaker BANKHEAD, your long service on the Committee on Rules, your succesful majority leadership, together with your fine mental attainments, richly endow you with all the qualifications necessary to well and successfully perform the duties of this great office. We know that you will be just and fair to all of us. We also believe that during your service you will add not only respect and honor to yourself but to the great party you represent. And at this time I want to present to you my warm personal congratulations; and in behalf of the membership of the House of Representatives, your colleagues on each side of the aisle, we wish you every success and happiness in the performance of the duties of this office.

To the Members of the House I now have the honor of presenting your Speaker, the Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, a Representative from the State of Alabama. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER-ELECT. Mr. Minority Leader and Members of the Seventy-fifth Congress, I am, of course, very deeply and very profoundly grateful to my good and beloved friend the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the able minority leader of the last Congress and of this Congress, for the very cordial and complimentary fashion in which he has presented me to you as Speaker of the Seventy-fifth Congress.

I have been associated with Mr. SNELL in the House of Representatives for a fifth of a century, and although it is not my practice ever to engage in fulsome flattery or praise of any kind, I think that all Members who have been associated here with him for a number of years will bear testimony to the fact that he is a man of the highest character, of the greatest probity, of fine intellectual capacity, and, above all other things, whenever BERT SNELL makes a verbal agreement with reference to any parliamentary procedure, it is not necessary to reduce it to writing. [Applause.]

If I may speak a little in a vein of reminiscence upon this occasion, I feel very profoundly indebted to him with reference to a certain species of parliamentary education which he taught me. [Laughter.]

A number of years ago, and it has not been so very long ago, the Republican Party was in charge of the House of Representatives, and the distinguished gentleman from New York was the chairman of the so-called powerful Committee on Rules. Some of you may have noticed in the public press or heard upon the floor of this House something about a thing called "gag rule." [Laughter.] When Mr. SNELL was chairman of that Republican Rules Committee and brought upon the floor of this House so-called gag rules which, it appeared to me, stripped minority Members of every vestige of constitutional and parliamentary power [laughter], I was one of the foremost to pour out upon him and his associates the vials of my wrath, and almost felt justified not only in criticizing the rule but holding him up to the execration of mankind.

Then the tide of political fortunes changed, as they have a habit of doing sometimes in this country, especially in the past few years, and I became chairman of the Committee on Rules. In order to expedite what we conceived to be some legitimate party programs, I occasionally brought in here, as chairman of that committee, some innocent little rules [laughter] of the same nature. Thereupon the distinguished gentleman from New York, in an almost apoplectic frame of mind, would absolutely tear to pieces that rapine of every parliamentary decency. [Laughter.]

So I am reminded of the old Latin maxim, "Tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis"—"Times change and we change with them." [Applause and laughter.]

I am in the position here this afternoon which I undertook to express in the Democratic caucus yesterday afternoon, after my party associates had so generously bestowed upon me the unanimous nomination for this position. I think I shall repeat that, because it expresses my feelings here.

No man who has been in public life, when some particular kindness has been bestowed upon him, when he has been made the mark of some particular manifestation of regard and esteem upon the part of his associates, has not felt absolutely incapable, in mere words, to express genuinely and truly the emotions of gratitude and appreciation that well up in his heart. I find myself in that situation now.

I cannot forget, my friends, the very tragical and distressing circumstances under which I succeeded to this place, and I do not think that it will be amiss upon this occasion—although later adequate memorial services will be held to his memory—to say that out of devotion to his friendship and in admiration for the invaluable public service of my predecessor, the late lamented and beloved Joseph W. Byrns [applause], I cannot but feel that somehow and in some way his spiritual presence and his solicitude still abide within this Chamber.

I thank you, my friends, for this generous manifestation of your confidence and your esteem. I think that it may be properly said that the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States is certainly one of the greatest deliberative bodies upon the face of this earth. I fully realize, after long observation of the post, the exactions that fall upon the proper execution of the labors of the Speaker, the kind of diligence that he must exercise, the prudence that he must always observe in his decisions, the industry that he must apply to the complicated problems of legislation with which in large measure he is confronted, and at the same time to be fair, courteous, and equitable not only to every segment of public opinion in the House, but particularly meticulous and scrupulous in observing the rights of every individual Member, particularly those upon the minority side.

I realize that some great men have been my predecessors in this position, and I fully realize my inadequacy to measure up to their fine abilities and to the noble traditions they have handed down to those who shall stand in this place. I think it unwise and improper for any incumbent upon taking office to make too many promises, and I shall withhold making any this morning, save to say to you that I shall, in the performance of this duty and responsibility which you have entrusted to me, at all times endeavor to be just and fair and equitable, and to attempt to the very utmost of my limited ability, with the help of God, my Creator, to try to measure up to the illustrious traditions that have been handed down to me by those great predecessors whose portraits hang in the outer corridor. To this end I ask, and I know that I shall receive, your generous cooperation upon both sides of the aisle. [Applause.]

I am now prepared to take the oath of office, and I request that the dean of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], administer the oath. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH then administered the oath of office to the Speaker.

SWEARING IN OF THE MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. Some years ago a precedent which had theretofore existed of having the oath administered to Members by States was discontinued and a precedent set whereby all Members took the oath of office at one and the same time. in order to avoid confusion the Chair thinks it best to follow the latter precedent, and the Chair asks each Member of the House and each Delegate to rise in his place while the Chair administers the oath of office.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. JENKS] stand aside.

Despite the fact that a certificate of his election has been filed with the Speaker, it may be impeached by certain facts which tend to show that he has not received a plurality of the votes duly cast in that congressional district.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire will stand aside momentarily.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the gentleman from New Hampshire standing aside at this time, but it is with the definite understanding that in doing this he yields none of his rights or privileges as a Member of this House or the right of taking the oath of office at this time.

The rules and precedents of the House provide that every man who is duly qualified shall take the oath of office at the beginning of the Congress. Our rules provide that qualification is shown by a duly authenticated certificate from the Governor of the State. The gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. JENKS, has such a certificate and it has been filed with the Clerk of the House.

The laws of the State of New Hampshire provide that a ballot commission is the final adjudicator in regard to these matters.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Just a moment. I do not yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that at this particular time the matter is not debatable.

Mr. SNELL. I know the gentleman from New York wants to be fair and right in this matter. He has asked that the gentleman from New Hampshire stand aside, and I have a perfect right to make a statement.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Not at this time. The gentleman may make his statement later.

Mr. SNELL. I think I have the right to make this statement now and under the circumstances should be allowed to make it.

The SPEAKER. The request made by the gentleman from New York was that the gentleman holding certificate of election from the State of New Hampshire stand aside momentarily.

The Chair is of the opinion that he waives no rights and just as soon as the other Members take the oath the matter can be settled.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I thought it proper for me to make a reasonable statement at this time. It has always been so considered by the House. But if the Speaker and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] decide I should not do so, I relinquish the floor because I know what I do now must be by unanimous consent and will present a resolution later.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later if he desires to extend his argument.

The Members-elect and the Delegates arose and the Speaker administered the oath of office.

INDUSTRIAL DEMOCRACY—ADDRESS BY JOHN L. LEWIS

[Mr. GUFFEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address on the subject of Industrial Democracy, delivered by John L. Lewis on Dec. 31, 1936, which appears in the Appendix.]

EXPORTATION OF ARMS AND MUNITIONS TO SPAIN

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am about to do something that is unusual, but that has heretofore been done. I present a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration without reference to a committee, and that it may be passed and signed without delay notwithstanding the rules. If the Senate will permit me, I shall make a brief statement of the nature of the joint resolution and then have it read.

The joint resolution simply makes it unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States or any of its possessions, or to export to a foreign country for transshipment, to Spain, or for the use of either of the opposing parties in Spain during the present internal strife in that country.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the joint resolution mention Spain, or just describe a condition that fits the situation in Spain?

Mr. PITTMAN. It mentions Spain alone, and the reason for that determination, after consultation, to mention Spain alone was that we know exactly the conditions existing in Spain, and that such conditions of internal warfare necessitate an embargo on the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war.

The question as to whether the term "civil war" applies or does not apply need not be determined. It would possibly be far more difficult to describe conditions generally that might arise in the future in a foreign country that would justify a similar embargo, and therefore we hesitated to make the resolution general. When I say "we", I refer to the President of the United States, to Representative McREYNOLDS, to R. Walton Moore, Assistant and Acting Secretary of State, and to the legal branch of the Department of State.

As the Senator from Texas well understands, the Members of Congress have just arrived in Washington, and it has been impossible to get the committees together. It may be difficult to do so now.

I wish to have it distinctly understood, of course, that the joint resolution is mandatory; it is not a delegation of discretion or authority. It merely declares a certain thing to be unlawful so long as the strife referred to exists.

It goes further than that, however. The joint resolution makes it unlawful to export to any place for the use of either of the opposing forces in Spain any arms, ammunition, or implements of war produced in the United States. It so provides.

I readily understand, Mr. President, that there may be sympathy among our own citizens for one side or the other in the contest in Spain, just as there is sympathy among some of the great governments and their nationals throughout the world for one side or the other in that great contest. I hope and believe that, so far as we are concerned, we are not, either mentally or physically or commercially, actively taking either side.

Let me remind those who have telegraphed to me suggesting that we are aiding the so-called insurgent government by this act that that is not a fact. The so-called insurgent forces in Spain control a tremendous portion of that country, if not the larger portion. They control a number of the ports. They have access to imports, just the same as the Government of Spain has, and, as a matter of fact, both forces are today receiving imports from countries whose governments or nationals are in sympathy with them.

There exists in Spain the most extraordinary condition of what may be called "civil war", if I may use that term, that has occurred in history, unless there was some parallel to it during the great Civil War in this country, and there certainly was not a complete parallel, because in Spain both forces are actually receiving arms, without blockade of their ports, from various powerful countries of the world. Both forces are being augmented by the soldiers of other powerful European countries. Not only that, but there is presented a situation which did not exist in our own Civil War, and which has not existed in any civil war I know of, where a great group of nations are threatening, without declaration of a state of war, to blockade all the ports of Spain, while some powers favorable to one side or the other are threatening to blockade only the ports controlled by the forces they oppose.

The facts with regard to this particular case are too well known to require debate. It is our duty, in my opinion, not to think of either of the opposing forces in Spain but to think of our own peace and our own country.

Two forms of government are fighting in Spain in what is called a "civil war", but it is a fight of foreign theories of government, not involving democracy, in which the opposing forces are aided and sympathized with by great, powerful governments who espouse one cause or the other.

Nothing would be gained by referring the joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Our committee knows the facts with regard to the Spanish situation. Indeed, every Senator here knows the facts with regard to it.

The reason for presenting this matter as one of emergency is that our neutrality law has been held to apply only to a war between two foreign countries, and not to internal strife, not to a civil war. The legal branch of the State Department in honesty has so held, and two licenses have been granted to export airplanes and airplane parts to Spain. I do not know to which force they are going, nor am I aware that anyone else knows. It is known that the consignee is in Spain and he may be "John Doe." The granting of the first license was sufficiently disturbing but another application was made on yesterday, and, as a result of the defect in our law, the license had to be granted, and over $4,000,000 worth of war materials, not alone airplanes but arms and ammunition and implements of war, have been authorized to be exported to parties in Spain. Whether those parties represent the insurgents or whether they represent the Government of Spain we cannot determine.

Mr. President, this practice should stop. There was a far less dangerous situation in 1914, which resulted in a World War into which we were dragged. An archduke was shot and killed in one of the countries of Europe. There was no great disturbance in that country and the great powers sought to arbitrate and compromise the difficulty. War broke out and swept the world and we were dragged into it, with a loss which can never be recovered. Today, say what we may, the situation is more dangerous than was the situation at that time. It is as dangerous as can be conceived. I say that it is our duty to pass this joint resolution at once, and I desire to present it at this time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, will he allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Let me preface my question, if I may, Mr. President, by the statement that I believe every Member of this body and every other decent, right-thinking citizen of the United States, must recognize the emergency which exists. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada whether in his opinion there would be any more difficulty, in the face of the present emergency, in passing a joint resolution amending the present law by a simple provision making the existing neutrality law apply to situations in which war exists within a nation, if the President finds such to be the fact, than to pass a joint resolution such as that the Senator now desires to have acted on?

Mr. PITTMAN. I may say to the Senator that I originally advocated what he has just suggested.

Mr. CLARK. I understand the Senator did so.

Mr. PITTMAN. I could not see why that course should not be taken. But certain information has come from various Senators, and from certain Representatives particularly, indicating that they do not desire to have the subject of the general law opened up at this time. We will take that matter up tomorrow in connection with the consideration of the general law.

Mr. CLARK. My only reason for propounding the inquiry to the Senator is that it seems to me that there would be very great advantage if the matter could be accomplished by an amendment to the general law in such a way as not to single out one particular nation where one government exists which has already been recognized by the United States, singling out one nation, rather than enacting general legislation to apply to all nations. Let me say further that, so far as I am concerned, I have no sympathy with either faction in Spain.

I am not going to object to the passage of the joint resolution, but it seems to me that we are confronted with a very unusual situation when we are asked to pass a measure of such tremendous, far-reaching importance without even developing the presence of a quorum in this body.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I desire to do what the Senator wishes to have done, but it was the thought by those considering this draft that there were some Senators who would rather limit the measure to one nation than have it apply to all the nations of the world, and I yielded.

I now ask that the joint resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 3) to prohibit the exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to Spain, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas armed conflict of great magnitude is now and for several months has been carried on in the State of Spain, Continent of Europe, with all the weapons of war and of unusual brutality between the Government of Spain and a large and well-organized group of its nationals, commonly known as the insurgent forces; and

Whereas the Government of Spain and the so-called insurgent forces each having possession of and asserting the legal and political control over parts of Spain and each attempting to prevent the opposition forces and the nationals claiming allegiance thereto from importing arms, ammunition, and implements of war; and

Whereas it is publicly asserted that some governments of Europe have recognized a so-called insurgent government and some governments are permitting their nationals to lend financial, commercial, and military aid to the so-called insurgent forces, while other governments are permitting their nationals to extend financial, commercial, and military aid to the Government of Spain; and

Whereas some of the principal governments of Europe have for a long time attempted to agree upon action that would prevent the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to either of the opposing forces in Spain and have sought to isolate Spain from foreign interference or intervention; and

Whereas said internal strife presents threats of extending beyond the borders of Spain and of involving other countries; and

Whereas the exportation from the United States of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to either of the opposing forces in Spain is dangerous to the security and peace of the United States and contrary to the policy of our Government as expressed by the President of noninterference in the internal affairs of a foreign state; and

Whereas an emergency exists requiring immediate legislative action: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That during the existence of the state of civil strife now obtaining in Spain it shall, from and after the approval of this resolution, be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to Spain or to any other foreign country for transshipment to Spain or for use of either of the opposing forces in Spain. Arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the exportation of which is prohibited by this resolution, are those enumerated in the President's proclamation, no. 2163, of April 10, 1936.

Licenses heretofore issued under existing law for the exportation of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to Spain shall, as to all future exportations thereunder, ipso facto be deemed to be canceled.

Whoever in violation of any of the provisions of this resolution shall export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, either directly or indirectly, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States or any of its possessions, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

When in the judgment of the President the conditions described in this resolution have ceased to exist he shall proclaim such fact, and the provisions hereof shall thereupon cease to apply.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the request just made by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. PITTMAN] is an unusual one, but, of course, the existing situation is extraordinary. I have always and invariably objected to legislating in the fashion now proposed. It is my belief that the Senate rules of procedure in such case should be followed; that is, that the joint resolution be referred to the appropriate committee and thereafter considered by the Senate.

In view of the statement made by the able Senator from Nevada, and after discussion of the subject with several of my colleagues, I at this time interpose no objection, but I want it understood by the Senate that hereafter I shall not consent to the passage of proposed legislation in the manner now suggested unless the emergency is very extreme. In all fairness I think, in order to make the record complete, we should have a quorum call before passing on this important measure.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon withhold his request for a quorum call for a moment?

Mr. McNARY. I withhold the request for a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the order heretofore entered it will soon be necessary for the Senate to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives in order to arrive there before 1 o'clock. Therefore I now ask that the proceedings be suspended in order that the Senate may proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to participate in the joint session of the Senate and House, and that the Senate return to its Chamber and resume legislative session following the joint session.

It had been my intention, if the pending matter could have been disposed of at this time, to move an adjournment until Friday; but if it is not disposed of now, I think it will be necessary for the Senate to return and continue its session following the joint session.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I cannot yield my position. I must insist upon a quorum call. The Senate can, of course, return to its Chamber and continue its session after the joint session shall have been concluded.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTE AND PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate now suspend its proceedings and, in accordance with the provisions of the concurrent resolutions heretofore adopted, proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to participate in the joint session of the two Houses, and thereafter to return to its Chamber and resume legislative business?

There being no objection (at 12 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.), under the concurrent resolutions (S. Con. Res. 1 and S. Con. Res. 2), the Senate, preceded by its Sergeant at Arms (Chelsey W. Jurney), the Vice President, its Secretary (Edwin A. Halsey), the secretary to the majority (Leslie L. Biffle), and the secretary to the minority (Carl A. Loeffler), proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives for the purpose of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States and of receiving such communication as the President of the United States may be pleased to make to them.

ANNUAL MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The annual message of the President of the United States was this day delivered by him to the joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress.

[The full text of the message will be found in the proceedings of the House, p. 84.]

COUNT OF THE ELECTORAL VOTE

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on the part of the tellers appointed by the Senate in pursuance of Senate Concurrent Resolution 2, to ascertain the result of the election for President and Vice President of the United States, I beg leave to report that the two Houses met in joint session this day, and thereupon the certificates of the electors of the several States and their votes for those officers were opened by the President of the Senate and delivered to the tellers, and on the certificates being examined, it appeared that the votes of the several States had been cast in accordance with the list submitted to the joint session of the two Houses.

From those certificates it appeared that the whole number of electors appointed to vote for President and Vice President of the United States for the term of office beginning on the 20th day of January 1937 was 531, of which a majority is 266.

The state of the vote for President of the United States appeared to be:

For Franklin D. Roosevelt, of the State of New York, 523 votes.

For Alfred M. Landon, of the State of Kansas, 8 votes.

The state of the vote for Vice President of the United States appeared to be:

For John N. Garner, of the State of Texas, 523 votes.

For Frank Knox, of the State of Illinois, 8 votes.

Which result, having been ascertained and counted and determined by the tellers, was delivered by them to the President of the Senate, who announced the result as stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be spread upon the Journal of the Senate.

(For tabulation of electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States, see House proceedings of this day, p. 83.)

EXPORTATION OF ARMS AND MUNITIONS TO SPAIN

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief observation regarding the pending request of the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] in respect to emergency neutrality action. Regardless of whether the initial offensive shipment out of New York into the troubled European area does or does not leave before we can reach it with corrective legislation, I think everyone will have to concede that there exists an imminent situation which requires immediate attention; and it is my entire disposition, so far as I am personally concerned, to cooperate in every possible way. I do this with less reluctance than would ordinarily attach to such summary action because the pending joint resolution is in no sense discretionary. It is mandatory.

We all want to reach the same objective, and the only problem is the method. But, Mr. President, I desire to associate myself definitely and specifically with the observations submitted by the able senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who now occupies the chair, and who commented upon the problem confronting the Senate before the recess. I want to make it plain that from my point of view it would have been infinitely preferable and infinitely wiser and safer to have added to the existing neutrality statute the simple prohibitory language originally suggested by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] himself, which would have met a general situation with a general remedy instead of inviting specific prejudices with a joint resolution aimed at one vicissitude alone.

However, since we seem to be beyond the deliberative point where that course can be followed if we are to meet the emergency, and since the only problem is the joint resolution pending, I wish to make one suggestion in connection with it to the able chairman of the committee. I should like to eliminate the preamble, because it deals with many contentious matters that are none of our business. It seems to me that the fewer words we use the better, because the fewer we shall then have to quarrel about or explain, or perhaps some day take back. The preamble is not necessary to the authority proposed to be conferred. I suggest to the able Senator that all the "whereases" are entirely unnecessary to the body of the joint resolution or to the validity of the action which we contemplate. On the other hand, the "whereases" contain numerous statements which might prove to be equivocal and embarrassing; and I want to ask the Senator, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, if he is willing that the preamble be eliminated from the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks the Senator from Michigan to suspend for just a moment while the Chair states the parliamentary situation. The Chair understands that the Senator from Michigan suggested an amendment to the joint resolution. The Chair should like to state that the Senate recessed for the purpose of attending the joint session of the Congress without the request for unanimous consent for present consideration of the joint resolution having been put.

Mr. PITTMAN. Before that question is put, if the Chair will permit me and if the Senator from Michigan will yield——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to say, so that when the question is put there will be an understanding, that I have no objection whatever to the elimination of the "whereas" clauses. They were really placed in the joint resolution after very careful consideration—and I think they are true—for the purpose of inducement, and to show there is an emergency. There being no longer any such need, I am perfectly willing to have them stricken. I think it is better legislative practice to have the "whereas" clauses stricken from a measure before passage.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, as I understand, Mr. President, the "whereases" are eliminated, and it is only the joint resolution which is pending, with request for consent for immediate consideration. On that basis I myself have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to say that there seems to be quite general and united opinion that the peace of the United States is threatened by reason of certain contracts which have been entered into calling for delivery of American supplies to Spain. I do not for one moment desire to take a different attitude upon that point. I do think that our peace is in some degree jeopardized—not so greatly as many would have us believe—but when our peace is jeopardized I think we, as Members of the Congress, should assume the right to take whatever steps are necessary, however drastic or however unfair they may seem to be at the moment.

I am not entertaining a sympathy with either side represented in the conflict which is raging in Spain at the moment. We have a policy of government respecting neutrality. Our policy of neutrality, rather hurriedly adopted during the past 2 years, has not covered the situation which has arisen in Spain, but our Government has sought cooperation on the part of Americans in a program that was intended to avoid the very embarrassment which is upon our doorstep at this time.

I think it ought to be said to the everlasting credit of those who are recognized as the leaders in the United States in the business of manufacturing and selling munitions of war that they have cooperated with the Government. I think it fair that we should pay them a tribute at this hour in appreciation of the manner in which they have cooperated with the Government. After making inquiries concerning the policy of the Government respecting shipments of arms to Spain, the leaders in that particular business have declined to deal with Spain. It had begun to appear that even without a definite written policy governing situations of the kind we are now considering we should have avoided embarrassment except for the fact that an individual American junk dealer, making inquiry of our Government as to its policy, or knowing what the policy was, willed to ignore that policy, came and laid his fee for license upon the desk of the State Department, and demanded license to ship arms to the Spanish Government. It seems to me that that action warrants our pursuing now a course which but for such action would be altogether unfair—indeed, unreasonable.

However, in that connection I should like to point out that although our embarrassment was directly occasioned by this lone American dealer in second-hand munitions of war, the supplies with which that dealer is involved at the present moment are the cast-offs of our own American Military Establishment, sold at public auction to this type of American, who has no respect for the policy of the Government; who has said, in effect, "The policy of the Government be damned."

I should like to make the point that if the United States would nationalize the munitions industry, and if the United States would adopt a hard-and-fast policy of control over the part of the industry that was not nationalized, we should be able to avoid experiences of the present kind, and many more that are bound to arise to plague us.

I think it altogether fair to speak of the spirit in which we as a Government are moving at this time in calling for this embargo against the shipment of arms to Spain. That spirit—and I think I shall not be contradicted in so contending—is one which finds us desiring to cooperate with certain powers in Europe who conceive that they can hasten the end of the difficulty in Spain by denying arms to either side engaged in that conflict. In that spirit we have been advised that we could be helpful in avoiding a world war, or a war of great consequence, if only we would cooperate, and deny from our shores supplies of munitions to either side engaged there in Spain.

Now, however, the question arises as to other matters. We now are about to cooperate, to lend our support to that cause, to lay down a hard-and-fast rule that there shall be no exportation of munitions of war from the United States to Spain, or to either side engaged in war in Spain. We are going to cooperate with Great Britain and with France in what I conceive to be a splendidly conceived program of preventing a spread of the difficulty now confined within the borders of Spain. But what are we going to do if next week, or the following week, Great Britain and France make up their minds that since other powers in Europe are arming one side in Spain, it is only fair to arm the other side, and there is a chance of our expediting and speeding the end of the difficulty there by selling arms to the loyalist forces in Spain?

Mr. BORAH rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NYE. Just one moment, Mr. President. What then are we Americans going to do? Are we going to go back, are we going to go over that ground again? Are we going to rescind the action which we now take? I feel it is a very pertinent question.

I now yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, am I to understand the Senator to hold that this joint resolution was inspired by a desire to cooperate with some governments in Europe?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I can only speak what I have been made to understand was the desire of certain powers in Europe for a wider cooperation in their program to deny arms to the contending forces in Spain.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if this resolution is inspired by any such policy as that, it is not a resolution of neutrality at all; it is participating in a controversy in Europe. I do not understand that the joint resolution has any such objective. I am no more desirous of cooperating with Great Britain than I am with Italy. I am interested alone in this country's keeping out of European wars.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I share fully the point made by the Senator from Idaho. If, however, at this moment I were asked to establish proof that France and England wanted us to undertake the course we are about to take, I should have to confess myself unable to do so. I think, from what we have seen, from what we have felt and have heard every day, we must recognize that there has been such a desire for cooperation, that there has been such a conception on the part of Great Britain especially—a desire to withhold arms from the conflicting forces in Spain.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am not only astonished but disappointed at the character of the argument made by the Senator from North Dakota and by his insinuations. If this joint resolution carried with it a discretion to anybody to determine to whom these arms and munitions should go, if it did not mandatorily, on its face, provide that they should go to neither of the contending parties, then sympathies or remarks on behalf of Great Britain might be considered to be pertinent. I must say, however, that I took part in drafting the joint resolution, and other Senators were consulted to such extent as was possible; but in the nature of things the matter was hurried because of what had happened. A license had just been granted and another license was granted yesterday, involving a larger quantity of munitions and implements of war. There was nothing we could do if we loved our own country more than we hated some other country or loved some other country, as some Senators may do, except to stop the exportation of munitions to both sides and all sides immediately. That is what the joint resolution proposes to do. I resent the complicated, ambiguous, verbose insinuations of the Senator from North Dakota, who assumes to himself to be a peace advocate.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada, in his expression of the moment, has not voiced a sentiment in which I cannot concur, except his closing one; but it seems to me that if we really were undertaking a strict neutrality policy, if we wanted to take action in a general way, we would avoid singling out one country if we could. I share the thought expressed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] this morning; I wish we could do this job by writing an embargo policy that would apply automatically to every country when trouble like that in Spain may come anywhere upon the earth.

Another question arises——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NYE. I will yield in a moment. If a like situation should present itself in any South or Central American country, a situation such as that existing in Spain at the present time, is it not fair for us to assume what we might do in such an emergency? Is it not fair for us to undertake today to say that if we do this thing in one instance we shall do it in all others? I wish, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] have suggested, that we could have a general approach to this subject rather than a specific approach dealing with one country.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I answer that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. It must be apparent to the Senator from North Dakota that this Government does not desire to interfere with the orderly course of business in this country by reason of any little sporadic uprising in Mexico or any South American country or in China. It must be such an internal war or strife or civil war as would reach a stage of magnitude involving the possession of large territory, the assertion of government, interference with outside parties, and threatening our peace.

We know we should not lend assistance by permitting the shipment of instruments of death to either side in Spain. But I doubt whether the Senator, with all his astuteness, could today draw a paragraph providing an embargo that would be properly applicable to every character of uprising and every character of strife in every country of the world. I know that I cannot do so. I have striven valiantly; I did draw such a paragraph to the best of my ability, after long thought, but it met with opposition in so many quarters that I surrendered it, and decided to leave that question to the more definite and able determination of our Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada a question. He does not mean, does he, that he has abandoned entirely the hope of being able to arrive at language which will enable us to define when a situation exists which we want to meet by a general program?

Mr. PITTMAN. I hope not, but I would not trust my own ability to do so. I may say to the Senator that it will undoubtedly follow that there will be many amendments offered to the existing neutrality law, all of which will be referred, I imagine, to the Committee on Foreign Relations, upon which the Senator sits. So we will have the advantage not only of his great ability and constructive power but possibly that of 20 other United States Senators who have long been engaged in this work, some of them as long as I have and some of them longer. That is what I want. We do know the situation in Spain, but what exact conditions in another case would justify this act I do not know. I hope that somebody may find out.

Mr. NYE. I have tried during the last few days, as has the Senator from Nevada, as I have seen many others try, to formulate language which would define when such a state of civil war existed as we wanted to guard against. I confess the grave difficulty that is encountered in any effort of that kind.

I entertain the largest sympathy with the committee which has tried, but found itself unable, to meet in a general way the situation; but I hope that we are not going to abandon our efforts to meet situations of this kind in the future without seeming to direct our energies alone against one country or against one faction engaged in a revolution.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I say there is not one faction here——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield further to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NYE. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from North Dakota seems to think that there is only one faction.

Mr. NYE. I have certainly not intended to do that.

Mr. PITTMAN. I think that each side controls about as much of the territory of Spain as does the other, and about as many ports; in fact, I think the opposition to the government controls more ports, and the ports are not blockaded; they are open. So far as our information is concerned, both sides are receiving airplanes and other munitions from their foreign friends.

Mr. NYE. There is, of course, this difference: We have recognized one faction engaged in that conflict in Spain at the present time.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I inquire if unanimous consent has been granted for the consideration of the joint resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such unanimous consent has not as yet been granted. The Senator from North Dakota is on the floor, speaking under a reservation of the right to object.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not understand. I thought the Senate was going to pass the joint resolution; but we face the situation that members of the committee have foregone considering it in the committee, and if we are going to have weeks of debate on it, I think I shall have to object, and let it come up in regular order. We have all heard the views of the Senator from North Dakota since a few years ago, and have heard him constantly, possibly every day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Demand for the regular order is made. The regular order is putting the question, Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BONE. I am not certain that I understand exactly the status of the joint resolution. Do I understand correctly that the Senator from Nevada has withdrawn the whereases?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Nevada has withdrawn that portion of the resolution embraced in the preamble.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada had the right to modify his own resolution before the question was put, and he has withdrawn the preamble.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Texas will withdraw his call for the regular order.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want to know whether or not we are going to consider the joint resolution under the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, when the question was put by the Chair, I reserved the right to object, and I asked for the privilege of making a few remarks upon this question. I have no intention of interposing objection to the consideration this afternoon of the joint resolution.

Mr. CONNALLY. I asked for the regular order because unanimous consent has not been granted for consideration of the resolution, and we have already heard a number of remarks upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Regular order is putting the request for unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada for the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 3) to prohibit the exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to Spain.

Mr. NYE. Now, Mr. President, may I finish my remarks?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, let me say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels constrained, under the circumstances, to recognize the Senator from North Dakota who occupied the floor at the time consent was given.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from North Dakota has already addressed the Senate. Can the Senator hold the floor indefinitely?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota cannot hold the floor indefinitely, but the Chair felt, as a matter of fairness, the Senator having been taken off his feet by the demand for the regular order, that he should be recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. But he was on his feet because business intervened, and unanimous consent was necessary. Of course, it is the right of the Chair to recognize whomsoever he may please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair feels that the Senator from North Dakota should be recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. And if the Chair feels that the Senator from North Dakota should be recognized for a little longer, let him do so.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I have but little more to say upon this subject. I am merely trying to make clear my desire not to seem to take sides in the prevailing Spanish controversy.

Mr. President, about a year ago a condition existed between Ethiopia and Italy which found us wishing that we had provided a larger embargo list than was provided in our Neutrality Act. We wished we had included oil. There was expressed on many hands at that time a desire to add oil to that list, even though Ethiopia and Italy were then at war. But Congress gave not even serious consideration to that thought, because there was an agreement on every hand largely that if we did our action would be an act of unneutrality toward Italy, because Italy was the only one striving for or wanting our supplies of oil.

So we refrained from any action at that time, just as a Congress refrained in 1915 from writing a policy of neutrality or providing embargoes, because it was then considered that to do so would be an unneutral act toward one side or the other engaged in that war. In our consideration of a year ago we followed the precedent laid down then.

Now we find ourselves this afternoon moving, as we will do unanimously, I assume, to write an embargo even though a state of war exists, writing an embargo which under the present situation is going to be a greater hardship upon the one side than the other engaged in Spain's trial.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NYE. Let me first complete the point I want to make.

Mr. President, unfair it will be to charge us with favoritism, because I believe there is no desire in a single mind in the Senate or the House to favor any side in this present controversy. What we are trying to do is to save ourselves from the possibility of being drawn into a war. I do not believe there is a thought on the part of anyone that we want to help the Fascist element or that we want to help the Loyalist element. Certainly that is far from our thoughts.

But, in the light of our past contact with this question, why is it not going to be quite natural for the Fascist supporters the world over to say, "A year ago, when the interests of the Fascist elements in Italy were involved, the United States refused to take any hand in writing an embargo on oil because to have written it then would have constituted an unneutral act; but now they are aiding the cause of the Fascists in Spain by providing an embargo which is intended to meet the immediate contracts entered into by the Loyalist elements of Spain with individuals in the United States to supply them with arms"?

Mr. President, if this action this afternoon is to be conceived, as I am going to conceive it, in the light of an effort to keep the hands of the United States clean and removed from the danger of being drawn quickly into that war or strife in Europe, I am quite willing that it shall be done; but I hope it is not going to be done in the name of neutrality, for, strictly speaking, neutrality it is not.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, it is very unfortunate that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE] should make such a speech on the floor of the Senate. Great credence is sometimes given to remarks made by Senators on the floor of the Senate. Many people think Senators know exactly what they are talking about. The remarks will be quoted in the papers and it will be said that the Senator from North Dakota has charged that this resolution was drafted with the intent of aiding the so-called insurgent elements in Spain.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. NYE. At that point let me say if anyone can read my remarks this afternoon and read that thought into them, I am very sorry, because it certainly has not been my intent. I thought I was leaning over backward to make it clear that that was not the purpose.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am very glad the Senator has added that statement to his remarks because it modifies them to some extent. However, when he compares the situation in Spain with the Italian-Ethiopian situation, all I can say is that he has not studied the existing situation carefully. There were no ports in Ethiopia that could be reached if the Italian Government desired to stop such action. The few little things which could possibly go to the Ethiopians had to be smuggled into that country. That is not true in this present case. The only two real ports today which the Spanish Government freely controls are Valencia and Bilbao. Nearly all of the Mediterranean and southern ports are in charge of the insurgents. The insurgent forces have the ports of Portugal open to them.

Because today a junk dealer has a contract, as the Senator from North Dakota said, with the Spanish Government does not mean that tomorrow another junk dealer may not have a contract with the so-called insurgent government. These two asserted governments in Spain have absolute free access to their respective ports because neither one has a navy sufficient to block the ports of the other, and they have not attempted to do so. So the comparison with the Italio-Ethiopian situation is not in point.

There is no desire in my mind or on my part to assist either side. Both of them can get arms from this country freely if they have the money, because their ports are not blockaded, but are open. What I should like to do, so far as arms and ammunition and munitions of war are concerned, would be to starve them both out so they would not have an airplane to drop a bomb on women, children, and the nonbelligerent population, so they would not have a shell to put into a rifle to shoot at long distance and kill innocent people, so they would not have a bomb to blow up buildings with noncombatants in them. I would starve them both out, as far as weapons are concerned, and that is my object so far as we can possibly accomplish it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I rise at this moment to ask the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee whether a meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee has been called for tomorrow to consider legislation on this subject?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Illinois has received information, and properly so, that if the Senate should not see fit to facilitate this matter and send the joint resolution to the House, then the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations would call a meeting of that committee for tomorrow. If we pass the joint resolution it will be unnecessary to have a meeting of that committee until the regular meeting day next Wednesday, or until some time at which a group of Senators desire to have it called.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I have no desire, of course, to place any obstruction in the way of what is considered to be a needed action, one made necessary by conditions which have been revealed; but, sir, recalling the position I took on this floor at the last session when similar measures were under consideration, I wish to reiterate that I do not give my concurrence to the method of legislation. For myself, sir, I present again that in a matter such as contained in the pending joint resolution it would be sufficient that the policy of neutrality be declared by Congress and, when the policy has been declared, that in the specific action to which just now reference is being made there should be left to the President, as Executive of our international matters, the right by proper Executive order from time to time to make such direction as would control the specific circumstances, because an attempt to do so by legislation would leave us in that position in similar instances that where the situation arose that would call for a suspension of the operation or some change in its policy there would be no method unless we should call Congress again in session and go over the whole matter of legislation. I prefer that its details may be left to the Executive order of the President, and for that I shall contend at a later time. I shall not now attempt to defer action or withhold from the Senate the opportunity to vote upon the joint resolution now before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], as modified by him.

The joint resolution, as modified, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the joint resolution pass?

Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. McNARY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BULKLEY (when Mr. DONAHEY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DONAHEY] is detained by illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY (when Mr. STEIWER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. STEIWER] is absent on account of official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I have been requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] and the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who are unavoidably detained from the Senate.

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained on account of a serious accident to a member of his family.

I also desire to state that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is detained in an important committee meeting.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. ASHURST. My colleague [Mr. HAYDEN] is unavoidably detained from the Chamber. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BYRD. My colleague [Mr. GLASS] is unavoidably detained. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote on this question, he would vote "yea." I am not advised how the senior Senator from Minnesota would vote if present.

The result was announced—yeas 81, nays 0, as follows:

NATIONAL REPRESENTATION FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution pertaining to national representation for the people of the District of Columbia, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Kansas.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 13) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for national representation for the people of the District of Columbia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, at the beginning of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress I am again introducing a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The purpose of this proposed amendment is to empower the Congress to grant unto the residents of the District of Columbia voting representation in the Senate and House of Representatives, a vote for President and Vice President, and the same rights to sue and be sued in the courts of the United States as those possessed by the citizens of a State. The approval of this proposal by the requisite two-thirds vote of the two houses of Congress and its ratification by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States would be a consummation of an act of fundamental justice for which our fellow Americans of the District of Columbia have for many years prayed.

This proposal has been introduced in each succeeding Congress for many years but without decisive result. In 1922, following a comprehensive hearing, the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia favorably reported the measure and urged its approval by Congress. This report really represents the high-water mark of progress in this movement so far as Congress is concerned.

The disfranchised and unrepresented permanent residents of the District of Columbia through their organized bodies have continued to advocate this proposed legislation and urge favorable action. Through their activities many National and State organizations of prominence have become interested in seeing that this condition of disregard of fundamental American principles at the heart of the Nation shall be corrected. Such sentiments have gradually spread through the Nation and have recently been the subject of friendly editorial comment by the leading newspapers of the country.

As a matter of fact, many of our citizens out in the States have been entirely unaware that here at the Capital of our great American Republic there is a community more populous than any one of eight of the States of the Union, contributing through payment of Federal taxes more than each of over one-half of the States, where the citizens are without any participation whatever in either their national or their local government.

In the recent national election, which brought out the greatest number of voters ever to participate, these good, loyal American citizens of the District of Columbia were required to observe from the side lines while their fellows throughout the Nation, without any superior qualifications, proceeded to elect the Chief Executive and the Vice President and the Congress.

Mr. President, it is a burning shame that this un-American condition has been suffered to continue until this day, and it is my intention to do my utmost to obtain some satisfactory action on this proposal early in the present session. In carrying out this intention I hope that I may have the sympathy and hearty cooperation of every Member of this body who believes in fundamental Americanism and fair play.

Rules: JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., of Massachusetts; and CARL E. MAPES, of Michigan.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether or not those Members placed on committees are the same Members who served on those committees last session?

Mr. SNELL. That is correct.

Mr. BOILEAU. I call attention to the fact at this time that the Farmer-Labor-Progressive Members of the House as yet have not had an understanding as to their committee assignments, and I wanted to bring that to the attention of the House at this time.

Mr. SNELL. As far as I am concerned, I have never had anything to do with your assignments. That is a matter that the majority must take up.

Mr. BOILEAU. I appreciate that fact, but I wanted to know whether or not vacancies on those committees had been filled by minority Members?

Mr. SNELL. The selections today are Republican Members who were members of those same committees last session.

Mr. BOILEAU. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 12:58 p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that in accordance with the provisions of Senate Concurrent Resolution 2, agreed to January 5, 1937, the Vice President appointed Mr. GEORGE and Mr. AUSTIN tellers on the part of the Senate to count the electoral votes for President and Vice President of the United States.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE

At 1 o'clock p. m. the Doorkeeper, Mr. Joseph J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, headed by the Vice President of the United States and the Secretary of the Senate, the Members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The Vice President took his seat as the presiding officer of the joint convention of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying the chair to his left.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the Congress, the Senate and House of Representatives pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws of the United States have met in joint session for the purpose of opening the certificates and ascertaining and counting the votes of the electors of the several States for President and Vice President. Under well-established precedents, unless a motion shall be made in any case, the reading of the formal portions of the certificates will be dispensed with. After ascertainment has been had that the certificates are authentic and correct in form, the tellers will count and make a list of the votes cast by the electors of the several States.

The tellers heretofore appointed will take their places at the desk.

The tellers, Mr. GEORGE and Mr. AUSTIN on the part of the Senate, and Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. TINKHAM on the part of the House took their places at the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hands to the tellers the certificates of the electors for President and Vice President of the State of Alabama, and they will count and make a list of the votes cast by that State.

Mr. GEORGE (one of the tellers). Mr. President, the certificate of the electoral vote of the State of Alabama seems to be regular in form and authentic, and it appears therefrom that Franklin Delano Roosevelt, of the State of New York, received 11 votes for President, and John Nance Garner, of the State of Texas, received 11 votes for Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Chair will omit in the further procedure the formal statement just made, and will open in alphabetical order and pass to the tellers the certificates showing the votes of the electors in each State; and the tellers will read, count, and announce the result in each State, as was done with respect to the State of Alabama.

There was no objection.

The tellers then proceeded to read, count, and announce, as was done in the case of Alabama, the electoral votes of the several States in alphabetical order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen of the Congress, the certificates of all States have now been opened and read, and the tellers will make final ascertainment of the result and deliver the same to the Vice President.

The tellers delivered to the Vice President the following statement of the result:

The undersigned, WALTER F. GEORGE and WARREN R. AUSTIN, tellers on the part of the Senate, BROOKS FLETCHER and GEORGE HOLDEN TINKHAM, tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, report the following as the result of the ascertainment and counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning on the 20th day of January 1937:

MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The President of the United States:

Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the Congress of the United States:

For the first time in our national history a President delivers his annual message to a new Congress within a fortnight of the expiration of his term of office. While there is no change in the Presidency this year, change will occur in future years. It is my belief that under this new constitutional practice the President should in every fourth year, insofar as seems reasonable, review the existing state of our national affairs and outline broad future problems, leaving specific recommendations for future legislation to be made by the President about to be inaugurated.

At this time, however, circumstances of the moment compel me to ask your immediate consideration of: First, measures extending the life of certain authorizations and powers which, under present statutes, expire within a few weeks; second, an addition to the existing Neutrality Act to cover specific points raised by the unfortunate civil strife in Spain; and, third, a deficiency appropriation bill for which I shall submit estimates this week.

In March 1933 the problems which faced our Nation and which only our National Government had the resources to meet, were more serious even than appeared on the surface.

It was not only that the visible mechanism of economic life had broken down. More disturbing was the fact that long neglect of the needs of the underprivileged had brought too many of our people to the verge of doubt as to the successful adaptation of our historic traditions to the complex modern world. In that, lay a challenge to our democratic form of government itself.

Ours was the task to prove that democracy could be made to function in the world of today as effectively as in the simpler world of a hundred years ago. Ours was the task to do more than to argue a theory. The times required the confident answer of performance to those whose instinctive faith in humanity made them want to believe that in the long run democracy would prove superior to more extreme forms of government as a process of getting action when action was wisdom without the spiritual sacrifices which those other forms of government exact.

That challenge we met. To meet it required unprecedented activities under Federal leadership—to end abuses—to restore a large measure of material prosperity—to give new faith to millions of our citizens who had been traditionally taught to expect that democracy would provide continuously wider opportunity and continuously greater security in a world where science was continuously making material riches more available to man.

In the many methods of attack with which we met these problems, you and I, by mutual understanding and by determination to cooperate, helped to make democracy succeed by refusing to permit unnecessary disagreement to arise between two of our branches of government. That spirit of cooperation was able to solve difficulties of extraordinary magnitude and ramification with few important errors, and at a cost cheap when measured by the immediate necessities and the eventual results.

I look forward to a continuance of that cooperation in the next 4 years. I look forward also to a continuance of the basis of that cooperation—mutual respect for each other's proper sphere of functioning in a democracy which is working well, and a common-sense realization of the need for play in the joints of the machine.

On that basis, it is within the right of the Congress to determine which of the many new activities shall be continued or abandoned, increased or curtailed.

On that same basis the President alone has the responsibility for their administration. I find that this task of Executive management has reached the point where our administrative machinery needs comprehensive overhauling. I shall, therefore, shortly address the Congress more fully in regard to modernizing and improving the executive branch of the Government.

That cooperation of the past 4 years between the Congress and the President has aimed at the fulfillment of a twofold policy—first, economic recovery through many kinds of assistance to agriculture, industry, and banking; and, second, deliberate improvement in the personal security and opportunity of the great mass of our people.

The recovery we sought was not to be merely temporary. It was to be a recovery protected from the causes of previous disasters. With that aim in view—to prevent a future similar crisis—you and I joined in a series of enactments—safe banking and sound currency, the guarantee of bank deposits, protection for the investor in securities, the removal of the threat of agricultural surpluses, insistence on collective bargaining, the outlawing of sweatshops, child labor and unfair trade practices, and the beginning of security for the aged and the worker.

Nor was the recovery we sought merely a purposeless whirring of machinery. It is important, of course, that every man and woman in the country be able to find work, that every factory run, that business as a whole earn profits. But government in a democratic nation does not exist solely, or ever primarily, for that purpose.

It is not enough that the wheels turn. They must carry us in the direction of a greater satisfaction in life for the average man. The deeper purpose of democratic government is to assist as many of its citizens as possible—especially those who need it most—to improve their conditions of life, to retain all personal liberty which does not adversely affect their neighbors, and to pursue the happiness which comes with security and an opportunity for recreation and culture.

Even with our present recovery we are far from the goal of that deeper purpose. There are far-reaching problems still with us for which democracy must find solutions if it is to consider itself successful.

For example, many millions of Americans still live in habitations which not only fail to provide the physical benefits of modern civilization but breed disease and impair the health of future generations. The menace exists not only in the slum areas of the very large cities, but in many smaller cities as well. It exists on tens of thousands of farms, in varying degrees, in every part of the country.

Another example is the prevalence of an un-American type of tenant farming. I do not suggest that every farm family has the capacity to earn a satisfactory living on its own farm. But many thousands of tenant farmers—indeed most of them—with some financial assistance and with some advice and training, can be made self-supporting on land which can eventually belong to them. The Nation would be wise to offer them that chance instead of permitting them to go along as they do now, year after year, with neither future security as tenants nor hope of ownership of their homes nor expectation of bettering the lot of their children.

Another national problem is the intelligent development of our social security system, the broadening of the services it renders, and practical improvement in its operation. In many nations where such laws are in effect success in meeting the expectations of the community has come through frequent amendment of the original statute.

And, of course, the most far-reaching and the most inclusive problem of all is that of unemployment and the lack of economic balance, of which unemployment is at once the result and the symptom. The immediate question of adequate relief for the needy unemployed who are capable of performing useful work I shall discuss with the Congress during the coming months. The broader task of preventing unemployment is a matter of long-range evolutionary policy. To that we must continue to give our best thought and effort. We cannot assume that immediate industrial and commercial activity which mitigates present pressures justifies the National Government at this time in placing the unemployment problem in a filing cabinet of finished business.

Fluctuations in employment are tied to all other wasteful fluctuations in our mechanism of production and distribution. One of these wastes is speculation. In securities or commodities, the larger the volume of speculation the wider become the upward and downward swings and the more certain the result that in the long run there will be more losses than gains in the underlying wealth of the community.

And, as is now well known to all of us, the same net loss to society comes from reckless overproduction and monopolistic underproduction of natural and manufactured commodities.

Overproduction, underproduction, and speculation are three evil sisters who distill the troubles of unsound inflation and disastrous deflation. It is to the interest of the Nation to have government help private enterprise to gain sound general price levels and to protect those levels from wide perilous fluctuations. We know now that if early in 1931 government had taken the steps which were taken 2 and 3 years later the depression would never have reached the depths of the beginning of 1933.

Sober second thought confirms most of us in the belief that the broad objectives of the National Recovery Act were sound. We know now that its difficulties arose from the fact that it tried to do too much. For example, it was unwise to expect the same agency to regulate the length of working hours, minimum wages, child labor, and collective bargaining on the one hand and the complicated questions of unfair trade practices and business controls on the other.

The statute of N. R. A. has been outlawed. The problems have not. They are still with us.

That decent conditions and adequate pay for labor and just return for agriculture can be secured through parallel and simultaneous action by 48 States is a proven impossibility. It is equally impossible to obtain curbs on monopoly, unfair trade practices, and speculation by State action alone. There are those who, sincerely or insincerely, still cling to State action as a theoretical hope. But experience with actualities makes it clear that Federal laws supplementing State laws are needed to help solve the problems which result from modern invention applied in an industrialized nation which conducts its business with scant regard to State lines.

During the past year there has been a growing belief that there is little fault to be found with the Constitution of the United States as it stands today. The vital need is not an alteration of our fundamental law but an increasingly enlightened view with reference to it. Difficulties have grown out of its interpretation; but rightly considered, it can be used as an instrument of progress and not as a device for prevention of action.

It is worth our while to read and re-read the preamble of the Constitution and article I thereof which confers the legislative powers upon the Congress of the United States. It is also worth our while to read again the debates in the Constitutional Convention of 150 years ago. From such reading, I obtain the very definite thought that the members of that Convention were fully aware that civilization would raise problems for the proposed new Federal Government, which they themselves could not even surmise; and that it was their definite intent and expectation that a liberal interpretation in the years to come would give to the Congress the same relative powers over new national problems as they themselves gave to the Congress over the national problems of their day.

In presenting to the Convention the first basic draft of the Constitution, Edmund Randolph explained that it was the purpose "to insert essential principles only, lest the operation of government should be clogged by rendering those provisions permanent and unalterable which ought to be accommodated to times and events."

With a better understanding of our purposes, and a more intelligent recognition of our needs as a nation, it is not to be assumed that there will be prolonged failure to bring legislative and judicial action into closer harmony. Means must be found to adapt our legal forms and our judicial interpretation to the actual present national needs of the largest progressive democracy in the modern world.

That thought leads to a consideration of world problems. To go no further back than the beginning of this century, men and women everywhere were seeking conditions of life very different from those which were customary before modern invention and modern industry and modern communications had come into being. The World War, for all of its tragedy, encouraged these demands and stimulated action to fulfill these new desires.

Many national governments seemed unable adequately to respond; and, often with the improvident assent of the masses of the people themselves, new forms of government were set up with oligarchy taking the place of democracy. In oligarchies, militarism has leaped forward, while in those nations which have retained democracy militarism has waned.

I have recently visited three of our sister republics in South America. The very cordial receptions with which I was greeted were in tribute to democracy. To me the outstanding observation of that visit was that the masses of the peoples of all the Americas are convinced that the democratic form of government can be made to succeed and do not wish to substitute for it any other form of government. They believe that democracies are best able to cope with the changing problems of modern civilization within themselves, and that democracies are best able to maintain peace among themselves.

The Inter-American Conference, operating on these fundamental principles of democracy, did much to assure peace in this hemisphere. Existing peace machinery was improved. New instruments to maintain peace and eliminate causes of war were adopted. Wider protection of the interests of the American republics in the event of war outside the Western Hemisphere was provided. Respect for, and observance of, international treaties and international law were strengthened. Principles of liberal trade policies, as effective aids to the maintenance of peace were reaffirmed. The intellectual and cultural relationships among American republics were broadened as a part of the general peace program.

In a world unhappily thinking in terms of war, the representatives of 21 nations sat around a table, in an atmosphere of complete confidence and understanding, sincerely discussing measures for maintaining peace. Here was a great and a permanent achievement directly affecting the lives and security of the 250,000,000 human beings who dwell in this Western Hemisphere. Here was an example which must have a wholesome effect upon the rest of the world.

In a very real sense, the conference in Buenos Aires sent forth a message on behalf of all the democracies of the world to those nations which live otherwise. Because such other governments are perhaps more spectacular, it was high time for democracy to assert itself.

Because all of us believe that our democratic form of government can cope adequately with modern problems as they arise, it is patriotic as well as logical for us to prove that we can meet new national needs with new laws consistent with a historic constitutional framework clearly intended to receive liberal and not narrow interpretation.

The United States of America, within itself, must continue the task of making democracy succeed.

In that task the legislative branch of our Government will, I am confident, continue to meet the demands of democracy whether they relate to the curbing of abuses, the extension of help to those who need help, or the better balancing of our interdependent economies.

So, too, the executive branch of the Government must move forward in this task, and, at the same time, provide better management for administrative action of all kinds.

The judicial branch also is asked by the people to do its part in making democracy successful. We do not ask the courts to call nonexistent powers into being, but we have a right to expect that conceded powers or those legitimately implied shall be made effective instruments for the common good.

The process of our democracy must not be imperiled by the denial of essential powers of free government.

Your task and mine is not ending with the end of the depression. The people of the United States have made it clear that they expect us to continue our active efforts in behalf of their peaceful advancement.

In that spirit of endeavor and service I greet the Seventy-Fifth Congress at the beginning of this auspicious new year.

At 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m., the President retired from the Hall of the House.

At 2 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m., the Speaker announced that the joint session was dissolved.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the message of the President be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 43

Whereas BEN CRAVENS, a Representative from the State of Arkansas, from the fourth district thereof, has been unable from sickness to appear in person to be sworn as a Member of the House, and there being no contest or question as to his election: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Speaker, or a deputy named by him, be, and he is hereby, authorized to administer the oath of office to said BEN CRAVENS in the District of Columbia, and that the said oath be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said BEN CRAVENS.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF THE NEUTRALITY ACT

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, an unusual condition now exists, which, to my mind, makes it necessary for this House to take some immediate action. I refer to shipments of armament being made to the scene of the civil war now being carried on in Spain.

I am sure that no man in this House wants to be a party to this carnage. It is necessary for immediate action to be taken to stop these shipments. The President is very anxious that this should be done, but under the law as it exists at the present time the law does not apply to civil warfare. You have noticed from the press that licenses have been issued to parties who are in a great rush to get this armament out of the United States before such shipment can be stopped. There is a race on between the Congress and the people who want to send these deadly instruments of warfare to Spain to help carry on this carnage.

So, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution which would empower this House to take this matter up this afternoon. I want it understood that the Senate has a similar resolution, and it will probably be passed before we can take action here. If you permit this matter to be considered now we can offer the resolution as a substitute for the Senate measure.

Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution, which I now send to the desk and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it may be in order for the Speaker to recognize the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs to move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 80, entitled "A joint resolution to prohibit the exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to Spain."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MAVERICK, Mr. FISH, and Mr. O'MALLEY rose.

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withhold his objection so we may explain the purpose of the resolution?

Mr. BERNARD. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

SPANISH CIVIL WAR IMPORTANT TO THE WHOLE WORLD

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, this matter is probably the most important that will come before us this year and I want to make a few observations before we take up this resolution. This is a reversal of a policy of the United States Government of 150 years. It is a reversal of international law of four centuries.

We may have a revolution in Mexico very soon. If so, it will be financed by American money and we will be placed in the position of having a revolution in a sister republic financed with American money, and our hands will be tied by a precedent like this. With American money the Mexican insurgents, if rebellion occurs, will get their munitions in Europe. We are setting a bad precedent.

RESOLUTION ON NEUTRALITY LAST YEAR NO GOOD; NEITHER IS THIS

Mr. Speaker, I do not say this resolution is wrong, but it refers to Spain alone. Last year I stated that the resolution on neutrality we enacted then was no good, and times have shown this to be true. I now say that this one is not either. If we are going to have neutrality, let us have it for the whole world [applause]; and if we do not have it for the whole world, let us not have it at all.

We wanted neutrality the last time and we did not get it. This is not neutrality, it is against neutrality. We are taking a stand against a democratic government, the parliamentary Government of Spain; and we are not indulging in neutrality, because this is the opposite. I am in favor of neither side in any foreign country. But we must face the facts. I think we should have some time to discuss the matter and not just 20 minutes. We talk for hours, days, and weeks on matters which are unimportant, and we rush through matters of such grave importance as this.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from Texas concluded for the present?

Mr. MAVERICK. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have considerable sympathy with the remarks of the gentleman from Texas. As the gentleman stated, it seems to me this is one of the most important pieces of legislation that will come before this body.

We should give it every possible consideration. I am quite sure that on our side there is no desire to block or delay any consideration of this joint resolution, but we should like ample time to discuss it and an opportunity, if necessary, to amend it and to strike out the preamble. We are prepared on this side to consider the resolution immediately and adopt it, if necessary, before adjournment today. But we insist that it should not come up under a gag rule with only 20 minutes on each side and with no right to amend.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Let me say that there is no inclination by anyone to cut off debate. I shall be glad, if this resolution is passed by unanimous consent, to have an hour for debate.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will it be subject to amendment?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is not in the resolution.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me that the gentleman from Tennessee is not indulging in overgenerosity by suggesting an hour for debate. In my judgment, this is one of the most important matters that will come before Congress at this session. I believe that we should have several hours' debate, with the opportunity for amendment, so that we can consider it fairly and squarely. I am sure that Members will be glad to stay here until midnight, if necessary, in order to dispose of the matter. We do demand that we should have adequate time to consider it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, we should have an hour on each side. The Speaker yesterday stated that this is the greatest deliberative body in the world and here we are starting off under a gag rule without the power of amendment. I am sure that no time will be lost if we are given an hour on each side with the right to amend.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, from the information that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] gives us, it is apparent that this resolution, which I have not seen—and I doubt whether other Members have seen it in print—applies only to Spain. If it is intended to bring about neutrality and stop the shipment of arms to countries engaged in civil war, why does it not say all countries engaged in civil war?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'MALLEY. Why pick out Spain? I remind this House that 4 years ago when I first took my seat, a bill was brought in here, was hastened, it was said the President wanted it, and only 11 Members voted against it. I was one of those 11. A few days later we found that it had been tabled in the other body because the President had wanted nothing like it. Why hurry about this thing, why rush it through in this way under suspension of the rules, when nobody can amend it? Why do we not have some debate, why can we not spend all day on this question, and if necessary, until midnight? There are some of us who believe we have a duty here to spend some time in considering the grave questions that confront us, instead of trying to rush legislation so as to be free to pursue our private efforts.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. The present neutrality law will expire by its terms before this session of Congress will have adjourned. It is natural to assume that during this session we shall have general neutrality legislation upon which there will be adequate opportunity for debate and for amendment. My understanding is that the purpose of this resolution is not the enactment of general neutrality legislation but merely to correct a defect which has arisen through world circumstances that make an amendment to the present temporary neutrality law necessary, which still leaves it necessary for us later to enact general neutrality legislation. Is not that correct?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman is correct. The present neutrality law expires May 1, but the present law does not cover this civil war.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. In a moment. We are now working on a general neutrality law which will come before this House and which will cover any condition of civil warfare in any country when it is brought to the House; and as far as I am concerned gentlemen may have all the time in the world to debate it. At this time, this is an emergency. These shipments are being made, and what we are trying to do now is to stop the shipment by this special act. That is the reason I am asking for this special consideration. I was advised by a Senator a few minutes ago that that body would pass this resolution this afternoon.

Mr. O'MALLEY. This body, under the rules, cannot consider what another body may do in respect to a piece of legislation.

Mr. BOILEAU and Mr. MAVERICK rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

IF YOU DO NOT SELL TO SPAIN, DO NOT SELL TO ANY COUNTRY

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I think this legislation is hasty and ill-advised. It was hasty and ill-advised last year, and there is no occasion for this sudden action. Why have we not been more fully advised? It just covers Spain. Why should we not apply it equally to all countries? The revolution in Spain has been going on for 7 months. It has always been the practice of our Government to send munitions to the legal government, irrespective of its merits. If we are to send munitions at all, send them to every nation—to Hitler or Mussolini, if they have a revolution. It has always been the policy of this Nation to maintain the status quo of the recognized parliamentary government or of the de facto, or even the Fascist government. Why, then, should we pick out Spain and suddenly say that we will pass this bit of emergency legislation? One of the criticisms of our Government has been that it indulges in hasty and ill-advised legislation. They have been killing each other over there in Spain for several months. What we do in the next few minutes will not amount to much; possibly they will kill each other for 10 hours more. We treated the American troops in that way around the time of the armistice. I want the gentleman to say why we should violate the precedents of 150 years, pick out Spain, and not pass a general law. I favor an embargo against every nation.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. But the gentleman from Texas is mistaken about the precedents.

Mr. MAVERICK. No, no. I have been studying this problem for a long time.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I cite him to the special acts which we passed for the control of a situation in South America, and I cite him further to the acts we passed for the control of a situation in China, where we have extraterritorial jurisdiction.

Mr. MAVERICK. I am willing that our continents of America should protect themselves, but I am not willing to take part in a European squabble. If we exclude Spain, let us exclude also Germany, Soviet Russia, Japan—all nations on earth, except possibly nations on our own continent, which is another question.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the rule this resolution cannot be amended by a single word or line. Is not that correct, I ask the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. If this resolution is passed, it cannot.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It cannot. In the manner in which your committee has brought it up, it cannot be amended. The bill reads "Spain", so it will be impossible for any Member to insert in place of the word "Spain" the words "all countries engaged in civil war." Is that not correct?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is correct, but let me say to the gentleman this only applies where there is civil warfare, where our people are attempting to ship armaments. I know that the Members of this House do not want these arms shipped to Spain or to any other country where civil warfare is going on.

Mr. MAVERICK. I did not want them shipped to Italy last year.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it true that these munitions are going to friends of democracy in Spain?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. They are going to both sides, I understand.

Mr. PIERCE. Is it undue haste to support the friends of democracy in Spain?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. I am in entire sympathy with what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] is attempting to do, but there are two points which I want cleared up. It is the desire of the gentleman to stop these shipments that are now in New York Harbor going across to people either for or against the Government of Spain?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONNERY. We want to stop that. Now, suppose some of those shipments are consigned to Germany and they are to go into Spain. What about that?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. This resolution covers that. It does not mention Germany, but it says "any neutral country."

Mr. CONNERY. And the gentleman intends to bring in legislation later which we will have a chance to debate and amend?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. CONNERY. Ordinarily I would not vote for this kind of rule, but I am in hearty sympathy with what the gentleman is trying to do, and I shall vote for the resolution.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I should like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether this legislation has been submitted to the Department of State and whether it has had the approval of the Secretary of State?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. It has the approval of the Secretary of State, and it has been approved by the President of the United States personally.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Washington. I am in hearty sympathy with this kind of legislation, but why not make it general? May I ask the gentleman from Tennessee, if there were a revolution in England today, would he introduce this resolution?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I surely would, if it were a civil war.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Against the present government in England?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. If I had my way about it, it would cover every country, and I expect to offer an amendment to the bill when it comes before this House later, covering any civil war.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true that the administration could have refused to issue a license for the shipment of these airplanes to Spain?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The administration could not refuse; otherwise it would have refused.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understood they could have refused to issue a license.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. They had no legal right to refuse it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I should like to ask if it is not a fact that the reason for asking immediate consideration is upon the theory that unless this resolution is passed today, this boat which we have read so much about will be sailing on toward Spain?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That and other boats, yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I understand the boat was on its way about 20 minutes ago, and that even if we act today the Senate undoubtedly will not act until tomorrow——

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I understood they would act today.

Mr. BOILEAU. In any event, does not the gentleman believe we ought to have a couple of hours this afternoon to talk about it and thresh this thing out, and then take it up for amendment tomorrow morning?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. We want to catch them before they get outside the 3-mile limit.

Mr. BOILEAU. They ought to make that before we ever pass this bill.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

LET US ENACT NEUTRALITY NOW

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman said when this comes up on the floor later he is willing for an amendment to be added which will make it apply to all countries. I am willing for it to apply to all countries now. Is the gentleman not willing to let this be considered for amendment, so that we can apply it to the British Empire and the German Fascist Government, and every other country? I say this because I hope we stop arms shipments to every country.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. May I say to the gentleman there is no country where this could apply soon? This is an emergency, and for that reason we are asking that it apply only to Spain.

Within the next 2 or 3 weeks a general neutrality bill will be presented to the House in which there will be provision applying to civil war in any country and giving the President power to stop the shipment of armaments to those countries.

Mr. MAVERICK. Is the present situation in Spain one of civil war, or is it intervention by Italy and Germany?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I do not know what is causing it, but I know they are fighting over there, and we do not want to get into it. [Applause.]

Mr. MAVERICK. All right; let us not get into it; let us keep out of it. But let us keep out of all wars and not just the Spanish.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am doing all in my power, and my committee is doing all in its power, to keep this country out of war. [Applause.]

Mr. MAVERICK. So am I. And so is everybody else on this floor.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. EATON. Are we to understand this resolution will cancel these licenses which have been issued by the State Department?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. It will if the ships are not over 3 miles at sea by the time it becomes law.

Mr. EATON. Suppose the shipments are consigned to Germany or to Italy.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. This covers shipments to any neutral country which shipments we have reason to know are going to a warring country.

Mr. EATON. Does the resolution so state?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. In answer to the question propounded by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts the gentleman from Tennessee stated that under existing laws the licenses could not be withheld.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. Is it the purpose of this resolution to prevent further licenses being issued for the purpose of shipping munitions of war?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; to Spain.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Can the gentleman advise how it is possible for us to give adequate study to this resolution when it is not even in print? Some of us do not like to vote for bills when we have not copies of them to study.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I can give the gentleman a copy of this resolution. It is brought up in its present shape because of the emergency; but there is not very much to consider, I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin; it is just a plain little resolution.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If it is only a question of the stopping of the one or two shipments that have already been licensed, I am wondering, if the Government really wanted to stop them, whether they could not find some reason why those ships should not leave port.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I know of no way in which it could be done.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I may say to the chairman of this committee that I think there is not a man or woman in the House who does not want and who does not expect the gentleman's committee to bring in general neutrality legislation; but the very mechanics of bringing in general legislation is such that it makes it impossible to do it today. This is strictly and solely an emergency proposition. This resolution is brought in to meet a specific emergency and nothing else.

I ask the gentleman if it is not his purpose when he brings in general neutrality legislation to bring it in under such conditions that each and every Member of the House may be heard and may have full opportunity to offer amendments?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman is exactly right about it. We are trying now to formulate the new neutrality bill, which will be introduced, I hope, in a few days. When this neutrality bill comes to the floor of the House, if I have my way, it will be under an open rule and every Member can be heard and can offer amendments. We want that bill to be thoroughly discussed.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Does the gentleman object to the offering of any amendment to the pending resolution?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am afraid it would delay its passage.

Mr. MAVERICK. Why should it delay passage if debate is limited to 2 hours?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to give the gentleman plenty of time; that is all I can do. I shall take scarcely any time. I will give the gentleman most of my time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MAVERICK and Mr. BERNARD objected.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, and that debate be limited to half an hour a side, subject to the rules of the House.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman make it an hour a side?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The resolution will be considered under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If in addition to the hour's debate, divided equally, the resolution will be taken up under the 5-minute rule, I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAVERICK. Do I understand that if the resolution comes up in the way now requested by the gentleman from Tennessee that amendments may be offered?

The SPEAKER. Yes; under the general rules of the House.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman be willing to make the time 45 minutes to a side?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask the consideration of the membership and hope they will not insist on more than half an hour a side, for the resolution is to be considered under the 5-minute rule. I hope no objection will be made.

Mr. FISH. Is it the intention of the committee to consider it under the 5-minute rule?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. FISH. I do not think there will be objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that this resolution may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole, that general debate be limited to 1 hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] and one-half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], at the expiration of which time the bill is to be read under the 5-minute rule.

Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. BOILEAU. I may state that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BERNARD] was on his feet and tried two or three times to gain the attention of the Speaker and to object. I am sure the Speaker did not see the gentleman from Minnesota, but he was on his feet attempting to make his objection. I therefore request the Speaker to give further consideration to the gentleman's wishes in this respect.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I think the gentleman's objection came too late.

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I objected four times.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I understood the Chair had already ruled.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BERNARD] state to the Chair that he was on his feet objecting to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I objected four times.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman on his feet when the Chair put the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BERNARD. I objected; yes.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make an announcement at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee will meet in 10 minutes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now recess until 3:30 o'clock today.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 3. Joint resolution to prohibit the exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war from the United States to Spain.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. GIBSON members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments, viz: Department of the Treasury, Department of War, Department of the Interior, Department of Agriculture, Department of Commerce, Department of Labor, United States Tariff Commission, and Export-Import Bank of Washington.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order at this time to consider the Senate joint resolution which has just been reported to the House under the general rules of the House, with 1 hour's general debate, to be equally divided between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the request provides that the resolution shall be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that, of course, will give opportunity for the offering of amendments?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. And there is provided an hour's debate altogether?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I file a privileged resolution for printing in the RECORD and move the present consideration of the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

House Resolution 44

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution the House as in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall consider the joint resolution, Senate Joint Resolution 3; that there shall be not to exceed 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, whereupon the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the House consider the resolution?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the House decided to consider the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate Joint Resolution No. 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 3

Resolved, etc., That during the existence of the state of civil strife now obtaining in Spain it shall, from and after the approval of this resolution, be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to Spain or to any other foreign country for transshipment to Spain or for use of either of the opposing forces in Spain.

Arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the exportation of which is prohibited by this resolution, are those enumerated in the President's proclamation, no. 2163, of April 10, 1936.

Licenses heretofore issued under existing law for the exportation of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to Spain, shall, as to all future exportations thereunder, ipso facto, be deemed to be canceled.

Whoever in violation of any of the provisions of this resolution shall export, or attempt to export, or cause to be exported, either directly or indirectly, arms, ammunition, or implements of war from the United States or any of its possessions, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both. When in the judgment of the President the conditions described in this resolution shall have ceased to exist he shall proclaim such fact, and the provisions thereof shall thereupon cease to apply.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry for information?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MAVERICK. Is the Senate bill the same as the House measure except that all the whereases are cut out?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not able to acquaint the gentleman of that fact.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I may say that the wording is exactly the same, with that exception.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Texas that the Chair is informed by the Clerk that the Senate resolution does not contain a preamble.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is the only change.

Mr. WOODRUM assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there should be no difference of opinion about the necessity for the immediate adoption of this resolution. It is a resolution not designed to enact general neutrality legislation, that being a matter which will shortly be considered in this House, because the present neutrality law under its own terms will expire on May 1, and the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House will soon begin hearings upon a new bill, which will be promptly reported to the House, and this body will then have opportunity to consider fully and fairly a permanent measure with respect to neutrality.

The pending resolution, which this afternoon was passed by the Senate, as I understand, by a vote of 80 to nothing, is now before us for adoption or rejection. The only difference between the Senate resolution, as passed by that body, which we are now considering, and the House joint resolution, which the chairman of our committee, Mr. McREYNOLDS, sought to have considered, but which consideration was prevented by objection of certain gentlemen, is that the preamble is stricken from the measure. The preamble merely set forth the reasons which not only justify, but, in my judgment, demand, its passage.

The immediate passage of this measure is necessary because of the grave condition which exists with respect to the revolution now going on in Spain. The measure is not discriminatory in favor of or against either of the belligerents. We take no sides in that controversy by passing this resolution. Its terms apply equally and alike to both belligerents, and prohibits the shipment of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to the defenders of the existing Spanish Government or to the insurgents who are seeking to overthrow it, and it also prohibits the shipment to any other country for reshipment to Spain.

Our existing neutrality law prohibits such shipments when two or more countries are in a state of war, but it does not apply to a civil war wholly within a country.

The bloody war now being so relentlessly waged in Spain is not local; it is more than a civil war; it involves not only the peace of Spain but threatens the peace of the world.

Certain European powers who love war more than peace are giving aid and comfort to the respective belligerents and are aligning themselves with one side or the other, and a general European war is not only a possibility but constitutes a grave menace at this hour.

If we permit our munition makers or those who deal in implements of war to supply them to either of these belligerents, we not only countenance but we encourage and aid in the continuance of that war—a war which, if continued, may not only involve Europe but may embroil the nations of the earth in another great world war.

The necessity for the immediate passage of this resolution is due to the fact that the munition dealers are trying to ship their implements of death and destruction before Congress can act to prevent them from doing so; as proof of this let me read a news item which appeared in today's Baltimore Sun:

A race, dramatic but perilous to the peace of the world, is on between the Congress of the United States and at least two exporters of arms now loading or assembling implements of war for Spain.

If the House and Senate leaders, backed by the White House, can drive through a concurrent resolution by tomorrow night empowering the State Department to cancel existing export licenses, one shipment of aircraft, now being loaded in New York with feverish speed, may be held up.

Another shipment of even greater value, licensed late today and consigned to the Spanish Ambassador to Mexico but ordered sent to Valencia, would surely be embargoed.

SECOND EXPORTER GETS LICENSE

This second shipment license was obtained by Richard L. Dineley, a Pacific coast exporter, and he plans to send $4,507,000 worth of airplanes, machine guns, and millions of cartridges to the Spanish Socialist Government. He said his contract calls for delivery of goods worth in all about $9,000,000, for in addition to the war materials for which he obtained a license, he said it calls for gas masks and other items not covered by the licensing law.

This exporter asserted he was acting through the "Consolidated Industries Co." which he described as a "dummy" for several munitions companies.

I may state further that if we want to stop the shipment of arms and munitions that are now being sent to Spain, the thing for us to do is to pass this resolution before we adjourn, without a single amendment, for the adoption of one amendment would necessitate delay in securing the Senate's concurrence, and delay would be to the advantage only of the munition dealers. They are the only persons who should oppose this resolution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas 2 additional minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if we pass this resolution, we give notice to the world that insofar as we are concerned we are for peace and that the United States will not give countenance, aid, or comfort to the cruel and barbarous war now being waged in Spain by furnishing them with the implements of death and destruction. The policy of our President is well known. He stands for peace. America is a great peace-loving nation and we should aline ourselves with those countries that believe in peace and not in war.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not take any further time of the House. This is not the time to discuss what kind of neutrality legislation should be finally enacted. It should have teeth in it and be designed to keep our country out of the wars of other countries. This is a specific resolution dealing with a specific situation in Spain, about which there should be no difference of opinion. There is not a condition existing in the world at this time comparable with the condition existing in Spain, and we cannot pass any legislation that will affect any other country as it would Spain, because the conditions there are entirely different from those prevailing in any other part of the world.

I submit the question to the House and ask for a vote in favor of the resolution without amendment, and there should not be a single vote against it. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I have secured a typed copy of the pending resolution, and I should like to call to the attention of the Committee the next to the last paragraph, which provides that whoever violates any of the provisions of this law or shall attempt to do so, or shall attempt to export, directly or indirectly, and so forth, and I am wondering how it will be possible under the wording of the resolution to prevent a person making a shipment of munitions to a foreign country and then transshipping such shipment to a country where there is civil war.

I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], who spoke earlier in the day, expressed the sentiment of the majority of the House. Why would it not be better to bring in a resolution that applies to the shipment of munitions of all kinds whenever there is a civil war anywhere in the world? Then you could not transship at all. There is nothing to prevent the shipment of munitions that my good friend Mr. JOHNSON has mentioned to some country where there is no civil war and then transship to Spain. They can first ship to Mexico, or San Salvador, or Guatemala, and then transship to Spain.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I think the gentleman has overlooked the first section of the bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. I have not overlooked any part of the bill. But after these shipments leave this country we lose all control over them. If we want to be really neutral we should pass legislation that will make it absolutely impossible for an American to ship munitions to any country where there is war, civil or otherwise.

All you are doing here I am afraid—and I hope I am wrong—is to simply delay the shipment by compelling the owner to ship to a neutral country and then transship to the country where civil war exists.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. In answer to the gentleman's question as to why this legislation should not be general, we thought that under the conditions existing in Spain there would be no difference of opinion, whereas there might be if we applied it to all countries. We thought that we could pass this legislation and then later extend it to all countries.

Mr. KNUTSON. How long will it be before we can look for legislation of that character?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. We expect to get at it as soon as we can have hearings.

Mr. SCOTT. With reference to the shipment of munitions from this country to Spain, under present conditions are not Italy and Germany supplying most of the munitions that are used by the insurgents in Spain, and perhaps men? Would this then prohibit our shipping any munitions at the present time to either Italy or Germany?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The resolution provides that during the existence of the state of civil strife in Spain, and so forth, it shall be unlawful to export arms and ammunition from any place in the United States to Spain or to any other country for transshipment to Spain.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

LAW SUGGESTED IS INEFFECTIVE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious and a very important matter. It is perhaps the most important that will come before us this year, because it involves war. At the very outset I state one reason why we should pass a general law: Even though you say that munitions cannot be transshipped to Spain, yet they can be. In the present form of the bill it is ineffective. But if you prohibit arms shipment to the whole world, then we know that Spain will not get any of the munitions. The thing we ought to do is to pass a general law, and we can do that today. I am going to offer an amendment to that effect.

The law that we are passing now is not neutrality in the proper sense. Last year when we were talking about Italy and Abyssinia, it was said that we could not pass the law because Italy was already at war; but what about Spain? Spain has been fighting for 7 months, and there has been no declaration of belligerency by this country. Suddenly Congress gets in a dither and passes this law prohibiting the shipment of arms to Spain. I see no reason why we should do that at this time, unless we adopt a general policy and make it apply to all nations. If we pass this bill, we are establishing a precedent and a very bad one.

WHAT WILL WE DO ABOUT MEXICO AND THE BRITISH CROWN?

I know something about Mexico. It is my opinion that certain people in the United States of America are attempting to cause a revolution in the Republic of Mexico. Mexico is our sister Republic. What are we going to do about it? We are going to establish a precedent that we will not ship arms to any country, and so we will not send any munitions to the authorized Government of Mexico, and the revolution will then be financed by people in this country who have the money to make a revolution. Therefore the United States would be committing an unneutral act in connection with Mexico or in any nations in South America should revolutions occur there.

Let us be frank. Suppose there was a revolution in England. Suppose that England wanted some munitions to stop a rebellion against the British Crown. Nearly every man on this floor would say, "My God, are you taking sides against the ancient Crown of England?" Of course not. We would sell England all the munitions she wanted—and that is the reason this resolution only applies to Spain. They are selling munitions now to England, to Germany, and many different countries. So we sell munitions to Germany, but refuse to sell munitions to Spain. Is this not a fine diplomatic pickle? What we ought to do is to prohibit the shipment of arms to all the countries of the world. I hope this country will give up any idea of making a single dime out of war. I want to control these munitions racketeers, so there are no profits in war, and so we export to no nation.

THIS RESOLUTION IS OBJECTIONABLE FROM THREE POINTS

There are several things about this bill that are objectionable:

First, it is unneutral, ill-advised legislation. It is sought to be accomplished in too much of a hurry.

Second, it is not fair, not comprehensive enough, does not make a general policy, but only a bad precedent.

Third, it does not effectually meet the situation of the munitions business at all.

Let us consider Spain. The Government of Spain is the duly authorized, elected parliamentary government.

I have read in the papers that it is a Communist government, and even if it is a Fascist government, yet it is the Government of Spain as a nation, and according to international law it is none of our business what form of government is adopted on any country—including Italy and Germany. We are now reversing a policy of 150 years by not being neutral, by refraining from sending munitions to the duly authorized Government of Spain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WOODRUM). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 minutes more.

SPAIN AND ALL NATIONS SHOULD RECEIVE EQUAL TREATMENT

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, we are committing an act which is unneutral against the duly elected parliamentary Government of Spain, a parliamentary government like this Government, though we may not agree with it. There are two alternatives, at least there are in my mind. I am opposed to the shipment of munitions to any foreign country at all. I do not want to ship them to Spain and I do not want to ship them to Germany, but if Germany should have a revolution, she is entitled to the munitions as much as Spain. England is entitled to have them shipped. We are not being fair in this way in our international relations. To settle the question send no munitions out to any nation.

I am going to offer an amendment to make this apply to the whole world and I hope we will not waste any time in agreeing to it. Gentlemen say that they are going to bring in general neutrality laws in a short time. Do it now. Why wait? Let us have neutrality now and be fair to the whole world. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, those of us who have fought consistently for neutrality in the last 2 years can at least feel that we are making some progress, although it has been slow, uphill work. I recall only too well last year when the Neutrality Act of 1935 was about to expire on the 29th day of February. Many of us could not get the bill then pending out of the present committee in order that we might have adequate time to debate it and offer amendments. When it finally did come out, after a group of us called upon the President and insisted that it be brought out, it was brought out under suspension of the rules, which prohibited amendment.

Had we been permitted to discuss this all-important subject fully and freely, instead of 40 minutes, as was the case, and had we been permitted to offer amendments at that time, we could have prevented, not only this situation but others that no doubt will arise because of inadequacy of discussion. Open discussion never injured any worthy cause, and neutrality is a most worthy cause.

This resolution refers only to civil war in Spain. Why not in other countries? Surely we are not going to make exceptions and thereby play favorites. Civil war may break out today, tomorrow—who knows when?—in some other country on this earth. Conditions are ripe in certain countries for just such a contingency. Why should we wait until it happens before we lay down a course of conduct? Is it because there are secret agreements or unofficial assurances to favored nations as to what our conduct shall be? I, for one, wish to adhere to a sound policy of minding our own business. Therefore, I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Texas or the gentleman from Massachusetts in order that all countries may be included in the scope of this measure. Personally, I favor a declaration which will declare it to be our national policy to prohibit shipments of munitions to any place any time when war, civil or otherwise, takes place.

I do not want to hurt anyone's sensitive feelings in this matter, but it is the fault of the committee that we are in our present predicament and that the Government of this country finds itself unable to act, because of the blunder that was made by the committee bringing it in under suspension of the rules, prohibiting us from placing any amendments on it. Now that blunder is to be repeated by this type of hasty, ill-considered, ill-advised legislation. We are being told that this resolution is to be offered because an emergency exists. There have been broadcasts in the newspapers of this country for the last 2 weeks telling about the sales of these munitions. Why was not a rule brought in yesterday? We were here. We had nothing else to do. We adjourned early. Why did we not debate the rule for a couple of hours on yesterday? Why were we not advised as to what this resolution was to be, and an opportunity given to have it printed, so that we might read it and consider amendments? We are forced to debate this subject without any copies of this resolution.

It seems to me that every time the subject of neutrality comes up we are faced with this same proposition that we have to fight every inch of the way to get the smallest and the least consideration to have full and open discussion. If we are all in favor of neutrality—and we claim we are—then why do we not have some neutrality, instead of talking about discouraging debate and harassing those who want to discuss it freely, and only too often come in with the suggestion that we proceed to its consideration without amendment?

The chairman of the committee suggests we will not have any such civil condition arising in any of the other countries and that we should pass this at once as an emergency measure. Much as I esteem the judgment of the chairman of the committee, I claim that he has no divine authority nor omniscient powers to judge whether or not there is going to be a civil war in any other country as well as in Spain. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF] has expired.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

I have just listened to the distinguished gentleman's lecture. I am very sorry we did not have the counsel of his wisdom and advice when we were trying to draw a neutrality bill at the last session. If he ever came before that committee or offered a suggestion, no one knows it, and no one knows yet that he had anything to do with bringing out the bill. What he seems to be mad about now is that last session, when I brought the bill here, it could not be amended, and now he is mad because I have brought one here that can be amended. [Laughter and applause.] That is his consistency.

I want to say to the distinguished gentleman that we reported out a bill, and I applied to the Rules Committee for a rule, but later it was found that it could not be passed in the Senate. Then we compromised on the bill that was passed.

Are you neutral? Do you want neutrality? I want to save this country from becoming involved in European wars, and I shall not be a party to the carnage and crucifixion that is going on in Spain, and I want to see the eyes of the men in this House who will. That is the way I feel about it. [Applause.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KLOEB].

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Speaker, for 4 years I have sat in the deliberations of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House in the study of neutrality legislation. Permit me to say as a lawyer that when you consider the question of setting aside long years of principles as established by international law, when you attempt to curtail the established principles of the freedom of the seas, you are attacking big problems.

Let us consider the history of neutrality for a moment. Back in 1898 the McKinley bill was passed which gave to the President of the United States absolute authority to embargo, in his discretion, not only munitions of war but materials used in the conduct of war. That law remained the law of this country until the year 1912. In 1933 both Houses passed the Johnson bill prohibiting loans to any nations in default on their indebtedness to the United States, thus marking the first recent attempt at the passage of so-called neutrality legislation, although its purpose was essentially punitive.

In 1935 we passed a short-term neutrality law. In 1936 the House committee reported out a very comprehensive bill and sought for weeks to obtain a rule to bring that bill before this House. Then, ascertaining that that bill could not possibly pass the Senate, and desiring neutrality legislation with teeth in it, both Houses passed the 1936 bill, which happened to be a bill that I introduced, and is now the law of the land. This law is absolutely mandatory. It prohibits the making of loans and the extension of credits. It prohibits the sale and export of munitions of war to any nation engaged in war. It expires by limitation on May 1.

Unfortunately, this subject was new to all of us. We were plowing new ground. We could not possibly foresee that within 12 months there would occur another great civil war in one of the major nations on the face of this earth. So we are now confronted with this emergency measure, which is not discretionary at all, but which is mandatory upon the President of the United States to invoke its provisions immediately it becomes law.

Permit me to say that another body has passed this resolution by a vote of 80 to nothing this very afternoon. Permit me to say further that the head of the celebrated Nye Munitions Investigating Committee, who abhors as much as I do the sale and traffic in munitions of war between nations, and who is an advocate of Government manufacture of munitions, undoubtedly was present in the Senate this afternoon when this resolution was passed by a vote of 80 to nothing.

This resolution is mandatory. It absolutely prohibits the sale of actual munitions of war to either side in the civil controversy now going on in Spain. We are asked why we do not extend the provisions of this resolution so as to prohibit the sale and shipment of munitions of war to any country where civil war is being waged. We expect to provide for that contingency in the permanent bill that will soon be introduced in this House. In that bill we shall attempt to define "civil war", a term which requires study and consideration by the committee. Time has not permitted us to go beyond the immediate crisis.

I trust that this resolution passes without amendment, so as to save the necessity of conference with the Senate. Its passage today is imperative. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I asked this 1 minute to read an amendment I intend to offer:

Strike out paragraph 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Therefore be it resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That due to the existence of a state of war, civil, or other strife obtaining in any foreign country it shall, from and after the approval of this resolution, be unlawful to export arms, munitions, or implements of war from any place in the United States or possessions of the United States to any foreign country or for transshipment from any neutral or belligerent foreign country to a foreign country where a state of war, civil, or other strife, now exists."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield an additional half minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Paragraph 2 relating to licenses heretofore issued under existing law is left in the bill, but my amendment amends paragraph 2, in line 2, by striking out the word "Spain" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "any foreign country."

This will do what we who want to prevent any shipment of arms and ammunition to any foreign country desire, and do it right away. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. AMLIE].

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the amendment that has been proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] is fully adequate. It will make of this resolution an adequate statement of neutrality policy.

As the resolution stands at the present time it is an unneutral act. It constitutes an unfriendly act toward a government that is friendly to the United States. Not long ago a newspaperman wrote that the significant thing about this strife in Spain was the fact that all of the world was taking sides in that contest. This is particularly true of the governments of European countries and of the classes in European countries. It is true, of course, of individuals as well.

It seems to me that at this time we ought not to take sides but ought, rather, to adopt a well-defined and adequate neutrality policy. I have been struck the last few weeks by the fact that Members of this body and Members of another legislative body, who have not distinguished themselves by their efforts in behalf of neutrality legislation, have been quoted by the press as to what they would do to prevent shipments of arms from this country to the regularly constituted Government of Spain. These people are not interested in maintaining the neutrality of the United States. These people are pro-Fascist, and they would like to have the United States take a stand that would help the Rebel-Fascist forces of Spain.

As far as I am concerned, I believe that George Washington, in his Farewell Address, enunciated a foreign policy for the United States that we would do well to follow. If we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts this resolution will then constitute an adequate and far-reaching statement of foreign policy applicable in all cases, and not open to the charge that it is designed to injure a friendly nation. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, having heard the President 2 hours ago speak about the intrinsic rights of democracies to defend themselves, it is with a sad feeling that I vote upon this proposition before the House today. But it will undoubtedly pass. I wish, however, to leave this one thought with this body and with the esteemed chairman of the committee in charge of the resolution, from the group that I represent politically and economically, that before this Congress adjourns the proper committee bring up for consideration a bill providing for Government ownership of the munitions industry of this country. Be basic, be sound. The only way we can control this traffic is not by such resolutions as we are now considering but by smashing the munitions ring in this country and giving the people of the United States a program that will end the need for such hasty legislation as we are now considering. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, there is no disposition on the part of the Republican minority to delay, obstruct, or hamper the majority in the passage of this bill. We recognize that this is an emergency measure, that it has for its purpose the preservation of peace, and keeping the United States out of war by preventing the selling of munitions and implements of war to either side in the civil war in Spain.

We as a minority regret that it is necessary for the House of Representatives to rush through legislation of this importance without adequate debate. It so happens that in the other body they struck out the entire preamble. Some of the Members of the House, including myself, spoke to a number of the Senators when the Senators were here a few hours ago at the joint session and suggested that this be done. It might well have happened that we would have passed the resolution containing the preamble. The preamble practically recognizes a state of belligerency by the Congress in Spain, yet our State Department has failed to issue any proclamation of belligerency or insurgency. The adoption of the preamble by Congress would have virtually declared a state of belligerency to exist in Spain, instead of such proclamation coming from the President or from the State Department, and would have established an unfortunate precedent for future administrations absolutely contrary to international custom and tradition.

I am in sympathy with the purposes of this joint resolution. As I previously stated, I regret there is not adequate debate provided to discuss the bill intelligently and the present conditions in Spain. The resolution amounts to a complete change of the policy of the United States. If I am wrong in the statement I am about to make, I wish some Member would correct me.

As I recollect it, the Congress some years ago authorized the Chief Executive to permit the shipment of arms to de facto governments in South and Central America. In other words, we prohibited the shipment of arms to the insurgents or to the rebels against the existing governments in Central and South America.

We are now making a complete about-face in this resolution as far as Spain is concerned, which is the de facto or recognized government, as we have failed to recognize the insurgents, and provide that the Spanish Government shall not be allowed to buy arms and munitions of war in the United States. However, I favor the policy outlined in this bill because I think it is a step in the direction of peace and that we should not sell arms or munitions of war to either side. It is immaterial to me whether the bill passes in the form it is in or as amended by the gentleman from Massachusetts, as in either form it covers the object we have in view.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman briefly.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman stated this is a matter of policy of several hundred years. Is it not a fact that old policy got us into the most destructive war of all time a few years ago?

Mr. FISH. The gentleman did not understand what I said. I stated as far as civil wars were concerned, it initiated a new policy. I am heartily in favor of this bill, and I think a great victory has been won in the House today because the Democratic floor leader and the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs have both stated publicly that when the permanent neutrality bill comes up for consideration it will come up under general debate so that the Members of the House may take part in the debate, discuss the bill on its merits, and offer amendments. I take this occasion to emphasize that one of the worst things that happened in the last Congress was the fact that the important neutrality bill was brought up for consideration in the House of Representatives, which is supposed to be a great deliberative body, and jammed through under a gag rule which provided for only 20 minutes debate on each side, with no right to amend. We have the assurance given us today that when the permanent neutrality bill comes up for consideration within the next month that adequate opportunity will be provided for the offering of amendments and there will be ample general debate. [Applause.]

This is an emergency measure, and we on our side do not propose to play politics with it for partisan reasons. I am sure that most of the Republican Members will support the bill in its present form, or as amended, in order to stop the sale of American munitions to both sides in Spain, for the sake of war profits and blood money.

I think the gentleman from Texas made the statement that this bill goes farther than the wording of the bill indicates. It is not merely a question of stopping the shipment of arms and munitions of war to the different factions in Spain. The whole world at the present time is filled with rumors of war and is on the verge of a world war that may start in Spain at any moment.

We have to determine our neutrality policy. We have to determine now whether we will sacrifice war profits and blood money in order to keep out of these wars. I think that is the desire and will of the American people at this time. You can almost hear the beating of the wings of the Angel of Death as it hovers over Spain tonight or France, Germany, China, Japan, or Soviet Russia. We peace-loving Americans have to determine whether we will sacrifice the war profits that dragged us into the last war by adopting a strict, permanent neutrality policy prohibiting the sale and shipment of arms and munitions of war to all belligerent countries. As one who served in the World War and as one who loathes and abhors wars, I am in favor of stopping the sale of munitions of war to all belligerent nations and civil-war factions within a nation.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield in reference to that civil-war proposition?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman for a brief question.

Mr. RANKIN. In 1930 the old policy that we had come within a hair's breadth of getting us involved in a war with Brazil because the then administration permitted the shipment of munitions of war to the people of Brazil at a time when a revolution was on and it came very near drawing us into a war in South America.

Mr. FISH. I may say to the gentleman I am for this bill although it changes our traditional policy with reference to shipment of arms where civil war exists. Everyone on our committee who has examined the bill appreciates it is a step in the right direction toward keeping the United States out of war.

We were forced into the late World War against our will by the attack of German submarines on our vessels without warning. We did not want to go into that war, but we were forced into it, and we have now made up our minds, or at least the American people have, to stay out of all foreign entanglements and wars. There is nothing the Congress can do that would keep us out of war, as congressional resolutions are not sufficient.

The only people who can keep us out of war are the American people back home; and they have made up their minds that they will not go to war for the sake of war profit and for the sake of the war profiteers. If we are going to have another war, it must be in defense of the United States of America and not in defense of war profiteers, the munition makers, or foreign nations. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOOK. Is it not a fact the only effective way to have neutrality is to stop the private interests from manufacturing munitions of war?

Mr. FISH. I am not going to argue the question with the gentleman at this time. I have stated many times on the floor of the House that I am prepared to vote for Government ownership or regulation of the manufacture of munitions of war in the United States, which is the surest way to take the profit out of war. [Applause.] I want to serve notice on the Democratic majority that while we are only talking about the civil war in Spain, horrible and bloody as it is, that the people back home are much more interested in our own safety and in keeping the United States of America out of all wars. What have you done on that side to pass the American Legion's universal service draft bill which would draft capital, industry, labor, and the veterans on an equal basis in case of a future war? If you want to keep the United States out of war, take the profits out of war and pass the Legion bill along with the permanent neutrality bill next month.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman knows very well when we had that bill up for consideration in this House the Democratic majority would have passed it except the bill was drawn for the protection of capital, and labor was very much restricted.

Mr. FISH. No; do not blame the House. The House passed it and the Senate held it up. That is past history. Let us unite and get speedy and favorable action at this session.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; but we changed it. We cut out that amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will yield, I will tell the gentleman one thing we have done on this side. We have taxed the profits of the last war that will help to keep us out of the next one.

Mr. FISH. I think we are all agreed and have made up our minds that this country is going to keep out of war no matter what happens in any other nation of the world. If the other nations of the world insist on arming to the teeth and going to war, it is their war and not ours. We are prepared to spend millions for defense, but not one dollar to send an American soldier over to foreign lands to fight other people's battles. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as a great American once said, "It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us."

In my opinion we should pass this resolution, as written, at the earliest possible moment, and by a roll-call vote, in order to let the American people and the world know just how strongly the Congress of the United States favors keeping us out of a foreign war. I agree that this policy ought to be carried further to apply to the entire world and I am willing to support legislation to that end at any time.

I agree with the gentleman who stated a few moments ago that there ought not to be any more private enterprises manufacturing munitions of war. I have felt that for years, because I believe the munitions manufacturers and the international financiers have done more to drag us into war than everything else put together.

Let me say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who talks about reversing the policy of 150 years, that I do not care if we are reversing the policy of a thousand years if it will keep us out of the holocaust of war now going on in Spain. The people of the world are not thinking of technicalities. But when they look across the sea and behold helpless women and children ruthlessly killed with poison gases in the streets of Madrid or blown to pieces in the Alcazar, they shudder with horrow. Our people expect us to keep them out of such a conflict. Remember, this is the way we started getting into the World War, through these munitions manufacturers and other people who were willing to endanger the peace of our country in order to coin their millions from the blood and tears of the suffering men, women, and children of the world.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] asked what we had done to promote peace. Let me tell him what his administration did in 1930. A civil war broke out in Brazil—justified, in my opinion—and right in the midst of that conflict, in October 1930, the Hoover administration lifted the embargo on arms to the Brazilian nationals and authorized the sale to them of airplanes and other munitions that were being manufactured for the United States Army and Navy, and sent an American battleship into Brazilian waters, and in that way came within a hair's breadth of plunging us into a war with the people of Brazil—which might have involved us in war with all of Latin America.

When that battleship showed up at Rio de Janeiro, the entire army, navy, and marine corps of Brazil went over to the rebels, took Washington Louis, the then President of Brazil, and put him in jail, and wired Dr. Vargas, the rebel leader, and who is now President of that country, to come to Rio de Janeiro and take command.

Now, if the gentleman wants to know what we have done to keep out of a war of this kind, I call his attention to the fact that we narrowly escaped a war with the entire Spanish-speaking world in 1930 because the Hoover administration failed to do then what the Roosevelt administration is trying to do now.

The gentleman talks about what we have done about taking the profits out of the next war. We have been trying to tax the profits of the last war. If his party had started in at the time the war closed, or when they took control of the Government in 1921, on a policy of taxing the profits made out of the last war, and made those who got rich out of it understand that wars were not to get rich from, you could not only have balanced the Budget and paid a large part of the national debt, but you would have served notice on these greedy munitions manufacturers and financiers that they were not going to sacrifice the American people in foreign wars in order to make for themselves millions or billions of paltry dollars at the sacrifice of millions of human lives in the years to come.

I sincerely trust that this measure will pass without amendment. We can amend later. This is an emergency. I also hope that we may have a roll call on its final passage.

Let us register our voices now so that the 130,000,000 people back home may understand that we are going to keep them out of any foreign wars, if it is humanly possible to do so. [Applause.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker and Members, back in other days I have sent men to the electric chair, but I have always doubted whether the Government should have that authority.

There has been a galaxy of splendid gentlemen voicing their opposition today, and I wondered whether or not they felt like they were sitting as a jury passing on the lives of men and women they never saw and of whose quarrels they have no part.

I say, let Germany's and Russia's babies in Spain fight it out; they have violated every rule of civilized warfare.

I wish to say that I am in great doubt after listening to the gentleman who has control of one-half of the time on that side, who says he is for the measure but allots time to men who offer various thoughts and reasons why the legislation should not be passed.

One gentleman thought that we should wait until we had a war with Mexico before passing this emergency legislation. Nine million dollars' worth of munitions will kill lots of men and women.

As Members we are deciding on the lives of men, and I would want to go to sleep without being guilty of these objectionable tactics which, if they prevailed, would cause no legislation today and perhaps not tomorrow.

I wish I could present to these men the picture of all the legless and armless men, the widows and orphans, and the funeral processions that will be the result of these $9,000,000 worth of bombs dropped upon them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I shall not take the remainder of the time, but shall use only a minute. This bill passed in the Senate by a vote of 80 to nothing. It is necessary that it be passed just as it is. If it is not, it means delay, and we do not know what might happen in that event. Therefore I hope that all amendments will be voted down.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that in the Senate the vote was recorded by roll call?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have been so informed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is the fact.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution for amendment.

The Clerk reported the resolution.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: Page 1, strike out all after the resolving clause in paragraph 1 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That during the existence of a state of war, civil or other strife, obtaining in any foreign country, it shall from and after the approval of this resolution be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to any foreign country or for transshipment from any neutral or belligerent foreign country to a foreign country where a state of war, civil or other strife, now exists. Arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the exportation of which is prohibited by this resolution, are those enumerated in the President's proclamation, no. 2163, of April 10, 1936."

Paragraph 2, line 2, strike out the word "Spain" and insert in lieu thereof the words "any foreign country."

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the amendment. The resolution under consideration provides a prohibition against the shipment of arms to Spain. It is not in order to substitute other countries. Therefore the amendment is not germane.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection until I can make a statement?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I rather expected that a point of order would be made against the amendment; but there is no other way that I can find whereby we can get what we want to do in this matter except by the amendment that I have offered. In other words, I do not believe there is any language that could be written which would apply to the entire world as an amendment to this resolution. The resolution is confined to Spain; and when we try to extend it to the rest of the world, I suppose the point of order will lie. But I should like to have my friend the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee withdraw the point of order and give the House of Representatives a chance to vote on this amendment. Let us find out how the House feels about this legislation.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I advise the gentleman that he will have a chance to vote on that matter later.

Mr. CONNERY. I mean in the present temper of the House. Of course, if the point of order lies to this or any other similar amendment, or if proposed amendments be defeated, I say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I intend to vote for the resolution, but I should like to have the gentleman give the House a chance to express itself on how it stands today in respect to all foreign countries and not just as to Spain. Why not serve notice on the entire world today that the Congress of the United States is saying to the world that we will not mix into foreign entanglements or into their wars, whether they be civil or wars between foreign countries? Why not give the House a chance to express itself by vote? If the House does not want that at this time, if the House feels that it does not want to vote on general neutrality legislation until later, well and good; but why not give the House a chance to vote now and not press the point of order? It is a clear-cut issue.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. CONNERY. Merely to say, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the point of order, that after studying it carefully I fear that the point of order lies.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. It has always been surprising to me, during the last 4 years, that when the question of neutrality has come up we are always placed in the position of doing a little bit of our duty instead of our entire duty. I believe that we can accept the challenge of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL], who spoke a short while ago and who suggested that this question be put to a referendum of the people of a certain district. I might broaden that challenge and say that if the people of the United States had a chance to express by referendum whether they want the embargo placed on the shipment of arms to all countries or just to Spain, we may be sure how they would vote. The point of order has been made against opening this thing up and expressing the policy of the Government of the United States. I thought when I listened to the President that the policy of the Government of the United States is to say to every other nation in the world "When you engage in armed conflict, when you settle your affairs through the use of arms, we will not help you one bit, you can get nothing from us." That is what I think the policy of the United States is. I do not think the policy of our Government is to say to Spain alone, "When you violate the rules of civilized man we will not help you." Why do we have to wait until tomorrow to state that policy, or until next week or a month from now? Who is here in this House who is so sure that he may be here tomorrow? There are some of us who believe we may not be here, and I think when the duty is put before us that we can express what the people want here and now instead of at some future date. Why frustrate, why forestall the people of the United States by invoking parliamentary procedure? Why delay the people of the United States from expressing their opinion upon armed conflict and the shipment of arms to warring nations? They say some of us are delaying this bill by demanding debate and offering improving amendments. Debate is good. We ought to have enough debate to put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the names of those rascally Americans who are trying to make money off armed conflict—who think more of profits than the lives of fellow human beings.

We ought to put their names and their profits in the RECORD. We ought to hold them up to public disapproval by publication of their dirty trade in blood and tears. They ought to be run out of the country and deprived of their citizenship. That is what debate will do and exposition of the subject will help to do. This is why some of us want to open this up, so that the people of the United States will have a chance, through their Representatives, to say whether they want to pick out one country to try a neutrality policy on or have it apply to all countries and against all shippers or makers of arms and munitions.

I hope the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this House will not use what he has a right to use, what we all admit he has a right to use, namely, the rules of this House, to prevent the Members of this House from trying to do what they think their people want them to do. I plead with him to withdraw the point of order and to not make points of order against amendments which will give us a chance to say for our people that we want this Government to stop shipping arms and ammunition to any and every country in the world, either during peace or during war. To frustrate the House and the people with parliamentary objections is to defeat the policy of complete neutrality which the chairman and the committee say they favor so strongly. Let us get an amendment in this bill that will show the country and the world that this law is not aimed just at Spain but applies to all countries from now on. If we do today what the Democratic Party promised in its platform—neutrality and peace legislation—tomorrow can take care of itself and neither the Congress nor the American people will have to rely on promises of what may be done in the future.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAVERICK: In line 4, strike out the words "now obtaining in Spain it shall"; in line 7, strike out "to Spain or to"; in the same line, strike out the word "other"; in line 8, strike out the words "for transshipment to Spain or for use of either of the opposing forces in Spain"; after line 16, strike out the remainder of the resolution.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, at that point I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read the resolution as it will read with my amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the resolution as it would read if amended by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That during the existence of the state of civil strife from and after the approval of this resolution it shall be unlawful to export arms, ammunition, or implements of war from any place in the United States, or possessions of the United States, to any foreign country.

Arms, ammunition, or implements of war, the exportation of which is prohibited by this resolution are those enumerated in the President's proclamation no. 2163 of April 10, 1936.

Licenses heretofore issued under existing law for the exportation of arms, ammunition, or implements of war to Spain shall, as to all future exportations thereunder, ipso facto be deemed to be canceled.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I raise the same point of order which I made to the previous amendment. The gentleman from Texas is trying to do in a different way what was ruled out a while ago.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. MAVERICK. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Texas on the point of order.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I have never known of any rule that would prohibit the striking out of any portion of a paragraph. In other words, it has always been considered proper to strike out portions of any particular paragraph. If it happens to change the meaning of the resolution, that simply happens by virtue of striking out those words.

I simply propose in one paragraph to strike out the words "now obtaining in Spain", and then I say "for transshipment to Spain"; but I call attention to the fact that what I have proposed is absolutely germane, because it still provides that all licenses heretofore issued to Spain shall be canceled under such and such a resolution. In other words, certain portions that refer to Spain are stricken out, and all the rest of it is left in. I have not put in a single word. I have simply stricken out certain words.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Chair undertook to pay particular heed to the language of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK], and is of the opinion, for the reason which the Chair will presently state, that the point of order against the amendment is well taken.

The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Texas to what the Chair regards as a decision somewhat on all-fours with the question presented here. Of course. this question of germaneness often presents difficulties to a presiding officer, either the Speaker or a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole; but the Chair thinks that a long line of precedents clearly establishes the practice of the House upon questions of this sort.

In the opinion of the Chair this amendment is not germane to the original resolution which is now under consideration under the precedent to which the Chair now calls attention:

An amendment which, by striking out a portion of the text, changes the purpose and scope of a bill, is not germane.

Now, what is the purpose and scope of the Senate resolution which is under consideration? There can be no controversy that it relates entirely to the question of the shipment of arms and ammunition to Spain—one particular country—and regulates certain phases of shipments to warring civil factions in that country; but under the suggestion made in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas it certainly departs entirely from the limitation with reference to the shipment of munitions to the one Government of Spain, and broadens the field so as to apply to any government.

Under the decision which the Chair has cited. the Chair sustains the point of order.

LEGS, ARMS, AND GUTS—BUT WHAT ABOUT NEUTRALITY?

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, one of the Members talked about the legs and the arms of the poor people being killed over in Spain. In my opinion, as I understand it, that is a lot of nonsense, because I have seen a lot of legs and arms rotting on the fields of France. I have had guts of dead men thrown in my face. I do not like to mention such things, but the words I heard had nothing to do with the subject we are discussing. If we are to discuss dead men, I can talk as long as any man on the floor. Let us talk about the resolution, and references to "dilatory tactics" are silly. This is a parliamentary government.

But what I like about this more than anything else is that we have at last got initial recognition from the Democratic Party that we are going to consider neutrality. I do not want to criticize the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McREYNOLDS], but I am rather of the opinion that this neutrality matter has been handled from the start in a more or less arbitrary manner, as though possibly we were not intelligent enough to listen to speeches and weigh them.

DEMOCRATIC PARTY MUST BE DEMOCRATIC

We ought to discuss this subject and we ought to discuss it fully. I do not charge the gentleman from Tennessee with a breach of faith, but we were told that when the subject of neutrality came up it would be under an open rule and it would be given full consideration; but points of order have been made and we have been stopped from real consideration.

Let us review a little. Our memories are short. Thank God for that, but only last year we were sobbing over "poor Abyssinia." Yet now we have forgotten all about Abyssinia. The flag of Italy flies over Abyssinia now, and it is all over. It makes no personal difference to me. I am mighty glad, however, those who favor neutrality have gotten a little recognition, but may I say that if the Democratic Party expects to continue its successful career it must be democratic and listen to the views of its members.

PROFITS OUT OF WAR—NEUTRALITY—MUNITIONS' INTEREST

I listened with great interest to the President of the United States in his address today and I liked what he said about the Supreme Court; I liked almost everything he said. We know that the President has tremendous power, that the Democratic Party has tremendous power, too. Let us see that we use this power in a democratic way. Let me say to the leaders of the Democratic Party that we have not passed any bill taking the profits out of war. We have made a failure of that, and we might as well face the country with it. That is the first thing.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Democratic national platform adopted in Philadelphia contains a very forward-looking plank on this subject of peace and international relations, in which it declared in favor of taking the profits out of war.

We are in the surges of one of the greatest peace movements America ever has known—a peace movement that reached high tide when the delegates to the Democratc national convention, interpreting the longing that is in the hearts of our people—North, East, South, and West—wrote into the Democratic national platform last year one of the most comprehensive and definite pledges on the subject of war and peace ever offered to the people of this Nation. That plank is a sacred covenant between the Democratic Party and the people of the United States, and if we who are elected to positions of high authority on that platform fail to meet our responsibilities under it, I will agree that there is no virtue and honor left among men.

Let me, by quoting the text of that plank, remind the House and the country of the kind of peace action we are pledged to by its terms. The plank adopted at Philadelphia is as follows:

We reaffirm our opposition to war as an instrument of national policy and declare that disputes between nations should be settled by peaceful means. We shall continue to observe a true neutrality in the disputes of others; to be prepared resolutely to resist aggression against ourselves; to work for peace, and to take the profit out of war; to guard against being drawn by political commitments, international banking, or private trading into any war which may develop anywhere.

That plank is not couched in weasel words. It is as positive and definite as a promissory note, and the sooner we begin to carry out our covenant with the people and the more good faith we manifest in the performance, the better it will be for our reputations. In that plank we have a positively definite pledge by the Democratic Party to take the profit out of war.

Take the profit out of war and there will be few wars. I join my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] in his lamentation over the fact that though the Democratic Party, to which he and I belong, has been in full power and lord of all it surveyed for 4 years, it has done nothing to take the profit out of war; but I have high hope that under the incentive and impulse of the Philadelphia platform we shall make our amends to the people of this country at the present session by adopting and starting on its way to ratification a constitutional amendment to take the profit out of war. On yesterday, the opening day of Congress, I introduced such an amendment.

My proposed constitutional amendment also provides for a Nation-wide referendum before war can be declared, the only exception being in case of attack or invasion. My resolution, known as House Joint Resolution 20, is based on the philosophy that those who have to suffer and, if need be, to die and to bear the awful burdens and costs of war shall have something to say as to whether war shall be declared. I sincerely believe that if my proposed constitutional amendment is adopted it will be the means of preventing our boys from being dragged into slaughter pens in foreign countries, to be mown down by machine guns or blown to bits by bombs rained from the skies, to be horribly strangled by poison gases, or to die an agonizing death from disease germs hellishly spawned in foreign laboratories. I believe that if this amendment is adopted America will never enter another foreign war in the settlement of other peoples' quarrels, and perhaps will never enter another war of any kind, unless the need should come to wage a righteous war of self-defense.

In proposing this amendment I am honored by the support of the gentleman whom I have interrupted to submit these observations, a gentleman who has gone through the fire of war, one of the finest soldiers and one of the best citizens of America, MAURY MAVERICK.

In conclusion, I want to say that under the peace plank of the Philadelphia platform we are amply justified in the action we are about to take when we adopt this resolution cutting off the shipment of munitions to Spain. The genius who wrote the Philadelphia plank must have had prophetic vision, for you will note that it places the Democratic Party "on guard against being drawn by * * * private trading into any war which may develop anywhere." The very thought that there are men in America who would run the risk of plunging America into war for the sake of filthy dollars is enough to sicken the heart of long-suffering humanity. The adoption of the pending resolution is necessary to curb this gentry; but this is only the beginning, and a very small beginning at that, of the peace program we must enact if we keep faith with the people of America.

WE SHOULD FOLLOW DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Mr. MAVERICK. The gentleman from Indiana calls attention to the fact that the Democratic platform adopted in Philadelphia contained such a plank. We have so far failed; let us make a success—and enact effective legislation on that.

The next matter to which I direct the attention of the Democratic Party is neutrality. We did not adopt a sufficiently comprehensive bill at the last session. We might as well do it now. We have been letting the American people live on promises.

The next criticism is that we still have private ownership of the munitions interests. As others have said, the only effective way to control the manufacture of munitions is to put it under public ownership. All of these matters should receive our wholehearted, intelligent support. Let us keep this country out of war—take out the profits, observe neutrality, and halt the munitions racket. Let us do a good job. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the Senate joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read the third time, and was read the third time.

(The text of the resolution will be found printed in full on p. 90.)

Mr. RANKIN and Mr. KOPPLEMANN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 406, nays 1, not voting 22, as follows:

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent memorial relating to the inclusion of tribal Indians within the provisions of the Old Age Assistance Act

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialist respectfully represents—

Section 2 of the Federal Social Security Act, approved August 14, 1935, requires that States accepting the provisions of the said act, as they relate to old-age assistance, must impose no citizenship requirement which excludes any citizen of the United States.

The act of Congress approved June 2, 1924 (ch. 233, Public Laws of the United States, 68th Cong.), provides: "That all noncitizen Indians born within the territorial limits of the United States be, and they are hereby, declared to be citizens of the United States."

It follows that a strict interpretation of the acts above cited will entitle reservation Indians having the qualifications specified in the Social Security Act, and in State acts conforming thereto, to old-age assistance up to $30 per month.

The total number of Indians in the United States (annual report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1932) is 317,234. Of these the State of Arizona has 48,162, or above 15 percent of all the Indians of the United States.

Whatever may be true of the Indian tribes of other States, Arizona tribes contain a large percentage of old Indians, who, as regards the age requirement, will be eligible for old-age assistance. The addition of these aged Indians to the old-age assistance rolls would impose a burden upon the State of Arizona which it could hardly bear, and which it should not in reason be expected to bear.

The area of Arizona is approximately 72,931,860 acres. Of this total, 19,566,339 acres, or 26.8 percent, lies within Indian reservations. Much of this Indian land embraces particularly choice areas. None of it is taxable, nor are the Indians who occupy it contributors to the cost of maintaining the State government.

Aside from the fact that Arizona, as shown by the above figures, has an Indian population altogether out of proportion to her total population and wealth, and an Indian territory likewise disproportionate to her total area, it would also clearly appear that the matter of economic security for the Nation's Indian citizens is entirely a Federal responsibility.

Wherefore, your memorialist,

The House of Representatives of the State of Arizona (the senate concurring), respectfully but earnestly requests:

1. That the Congress of the United States do so amend the Social Security Act as to specifically except from its provisions relating to old-age assistance, or old-age pensions, all nontaxable tribal Indians residing upon reservations.

Approved, November 23, 1936.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Assembly of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolution relative to memorializing and petitioning the President and the Congress of the United States to authorize the construction of the Central Valley project and to make an appropriation therefor

Whereas California is in urgent need of the development, conservation, and stabilization of its water resources to prevent the abandonment of thousands of farms and homes and to avert tremendous financial losses; and

Whereas the State of California has prepared a comprehensive coordinated plan for the progressive economic development of the water resources of the State, carefully formulated over a period of 14 years, which provides for the control of floods and salinity encroachment, the improvement of navigation, the conservation and stabilization of water supplies for municipal, irrigation, industrial, and mining uses, and for the generation of electric power; and

Whereas the Legislature of the State of California in 1933 passed the Central Valley Project Act, which was signed by the Governor and was thereafter approved by vote of the people of the State at a special election held on December 19, 1933; and

Whereas the said Central Valley Project Act created the Water Project Authority of the State of California to execute and administer the Central Valley project, which project is a coordinated plan for the immediate needs of the great Central Valley of California; and

Whereas said Central Valley project has been investigated and approved by 13 agencies of the Federal Government and has been recommended for Federal financing; and

Whereas said project has further been recommended by the President's committee on water flow and by the National Resources Board as one of the country's foremost projects for a national program of public works; and

Whereas the House of Representatives has passed H. R. 6732, authorizing the improvement of the Sacramento River in accordance with the plan as set forth in House of Representatives Document No. 35, Seventy-third Congress, which recommends a Federal contribution of $12,000,000 to the cost of the Kennett Dam of the Central Valley project; and

Whereas the said project will be self-liquidating, and the cost thereof will be returned to the Federal Government from revenues obtained by the sale of water and power; and

Whereas the consummation of the said project will enable 50,000 American people to sustain themselves by their present means of livelihood, and will prevent their being thrown into the ranks of the unemployed, and, further, will stop the reversion to desert of one-half million acres of highly developed and settled lands valued at $100,000,000; and

Whereas a greater degree of flood protection in the Sacramento Valley is highly desirable; and

Whereas the construction of said project will give employment to thousands of workers, now unemployed, not only in California but throughout the Nation, thereby relieving unemployment in many branches of industry, particularly in the heavy manufacturing industries in the East and Middle West; and

Whereas the Secretary of the Interior did heretofore report to the President that said project was feasible from engineering, agricultural, and financial standpoints, and was adaptable for settlement and farm homes; that the estimated construction cost was adequate and that the anticipated revenues would be sufficient to return the cost to the United States; and did approve and recommend the construction of said project, which recommendation was thereafter approved by the President; and

Whereas the President did, by virtue of the authority of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, approved April 8, 1935, allocate the sum of $15,000,000 from the appropriation made under said act to the Department of the Interior, Reclamation Service, to be reimbursable in accordance with the reclamation law, for the construction of the Central Valley project; and

Whereas said project is now in the course of construction in accordance with said allocation, and it is imperative that continuing appropriations be made under congressional authorization to assure the successful completion of the project; and

Whereas the cost of said project has been carefully estimated by competent Federal and State authorities to be $170,000,000, and will be repaid to the United States, in accordance with the reclamation law, out of the revenues of said project; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress Department of the Interior appropriation bill H. R. 10630, which, among other things, authorizes construction of said Central Valley project by the United States and appropriates for the construction thereof the sum of $16,000,000 for the fiscal year 1937: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the State of California, through its assembly, recommends the Central Valley project to the President and to the Congress of the United States as of first and prime importance to the State of California, and respectfully requests that the construction of said Central Valley project be authorized, and that adequate funds be appropriated so that the construction of said project may be continued, to the end that the same may be completed, thereby conferring lasting benefits not only upon the people of the State of California but upon the entire Nation, and thus affording substantial unemployment relief now vitally necessary and rehabilitating a vast area of valuable and highly developed lands, thereby enabling thousands of American families to sustain themselves on their present farms; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be transmitted by the chief clerk of the Assembly of the State of California to the President and to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolutions memorializing Congress in favor of adequate enforcement and sufficient appropriations of money to eliminate oil pollution from coastal waters

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the General Court of Massachusetts hereby records itself in favor of the enforcement of Federal laws for the prevention of oil pollution in coastal waters, and urges the appropriation of sufficient funds for the proper enforcement thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That the Congress be urged to complete, as soon as possible, international treaties to prevent the discharge of oil on the high seas, in order that the present destruction of waterfowl, shellfish, and other natural resources may be stopped, and damage to coastal property eliminated; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the Commonwealth forthwith forward a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to the Members thereof from this Commonwealth.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, which were referred to the Committee on Finance:

Concurrent resolution memorializing the President and Congress of the United States to amend the Social Security Act to provide for the immediate payment of benefits, and the holding of reserves in the several States

Whereas the State of Michigan has adopted a "pay as you go" policy, with success and approval of the people of this State, so that Michigan today is an outstanding example of sound government; and

Whereas the provisions of the Social Security Act now provide for the building up of large reserves in Washington and the use of such reserves by the Federal Government for the uses of the Government in its operation, giving in return to the fund only promises to repay such borrowings in the future; and

Whereas the moneys which go into such reserves are trust liabilities of the Government to the workers of this country and should not be used for any other purposes; and

Whereas the Social Security Act also provides for the payment of large sums for assistance of the aged, children, blind, and health welfare, which have been considered immediate demands; and

Whereas the needs of the unemployed worker are as pressing as the needs of the aged, children, and blind when necessity arises; and

THE BUDGET (H. DOC. NO. 29)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to provisions of law I transmit herewith the Budget of the United States Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, together with this message, which is a part thereof. The estimates have been developed after careful analysis of the revenues, obligations, and reasonable needs of the Government, and I recommend appropriations for the purposes specifically detailed herein.

PART I

The programs inaugurated during the last 4 years to combat the depression and to initiate many needed reforms have cost large sums of money, but the benefits obtained from them are far outweighing all their costs. We shall soon be reaping the full benefits of those programs and shall have at the same time a balanced Budget that will also include provision for reduction of the public debt.

The fiscal plans of the Federal Government for these 4 years have been formulated with two objectives in mind. Our first was to restore a successful economic life to the country, by providing greater employment and purchasing power for the people, by stimulating a more balanced use of our productive capacity, and by increasing the national income and distributing it on a wider base of prosperity. Our second was to gain new advantages of permanent value for the American people. Both of these objectives can be accomplished under a sound financial policy.

Business conditions have shown each year since 1933 a marked improvement over the preceding year. Employment in private industry is increasing. Industrial production, factory pay rolls, and farm prices have steadily risen.

These gains make it possible to reduce for the fiscal year 1938 many expenditures of the Federal Government which the general depression made necessary. Although we must continue to spend substantial sums to provide work for those whom industry has not yet absorbed, the 1938 Budget is in balance; and, except for debt reduction of $401,515,000, it will remain in balance even if later on there are included additional expenditures of as much as $1,537,123,000 for recovery and relief. We expect, moreover, if improvement in economic conditions continues at the present rate, to be able to attain in 1939 a completely balanced Budget, with full provision for meeting the statutory requirements for debt reduction.

In carrying out this policy the American people are obtaining lasting benefits. Economic protection of the aged and physically handicapped is being secured through the operations of the Social Security Act. Ability of the farmer to obtain a more constant livelihood has been enhanced by the enactment of legislation especially designed for that purpose. The home owner has been benefited through the financing of mortgages at reasonable rates of interest. Investors in securities are being given a larger measure of protection by the Securities and Exchange Act. The market for corporate securities has been restored and industry has been able to finance its long-term requirements on a favorable basis. The rights of labor are being materially advanced through operation of the National Labor Relations Act.

I plan to submit at a later date an estimate of appropriation for additional relief for the fiscal year 1938, which I hope will not exceed the amount of $1,537,123,000, previously mentioned. This hope is based on the assumption that industry will cooperate in employing men and women from the relief rolls in larger numbers than during the past year. Many of those in charge of industrial management, recognizing their obligation to the Nation, have furnished a large measure of employment to the jobless. Today, while it is true that in some sections of the country certain types of skilled workers are still seeking employment, it is nevertheless a fact that the great majority of those now receiving relief belong to the unskilled group. It is my conviction that if every employer or potential employer will undertake during the next 6 months to give employment to persons now receiving Government help, the national Budget can thereafter be kept definitely in balance. Without such cooperation on the part of employers, the question of a balanced Budget for 1938 must of necessity remain an open one, for the very good reason that this Government does not propose next year, any more than during the past 4 years, to allow American families to starve.

To continue the gains we are making and to accomplish in the 1939 Budget a complete balance between receipts and expenditures including debt reduction, we must now lay the groundwork of our future fiscal policy.

While relief expenditures should decline with greater reemployment, the normal growth of the country naturally reflects itself in increased costs of Government. Many of the old functions and duties of Government naturally cost more as the industrial and agricultural activities to which they are related expand in volume. The cost of new functions and duties can be substantially reduced only by curtailing the function or the duty. I propose shortly to submit to the Congress a broad plan for placing the executive branch of the Government on a sounder and more responsible basis of management. The carrying out of such a plan will undoubtedly result in some saving in expenditures; but it must be remembered that what is generally known as overhead represents only a small fraction of total expenditures in any large business, Government or private.

Expenditures must be planned with a view to the national needs; and no expansion of Government activities should be authorized unless the necessity for such expansion has been definitely determined and funds are available to defray the cost. In other words, if new legislation imposes any substantial increase in expenditures either in the expansion of existing or the creation of new activities, it becomes a matter of sound policy simultaneously to provide new revenue sufficient to meet the additional cost. The success of such a policy can be assured only through the full and friendly cooperation of the Congress and the Executive. Of this cooperation I am confident.

PART II

RECOMMENDATIONS

Temporary miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes: I recommend that the Congress take steps by suitable legislation to extend the miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes which under existing law will expire next June and July, and also to maintain the current rates of those taxes which would otherwise be reduced next June. I consider that the revenue from such taxes or its equivalent is necessary for the financing of the Budget for 1938.

Postal receipts: The estimates of appropriations for the Postal Service included in the 1938 Budget are predicated upon the continuance during that fiscal year of the 3-cent postage rate for first-class mail other than for local delivery. While the Government makes a profit on first-class mail, the Postal Service is not self-supporting because it carries other classes of mail at a considerable loss, as shown in the tabular footnote on page XXIII. It should be the definite policy of the Government to operate the Postal Service out of postal receipts and a continuation of the 3-cent rate will be a necessary step toward the accomplishment of this purpose.

Civilian Conservation Corps: The Civilian Conservation Corps has demonstrated its usefulness and has met with general public approval. It should be continued. I intend shortly to submit a supplemental estimate of appropriation to carry the Corps from March 31, 1937, to the end of the current fiscal year; and I strongly recommend that Congress enact during its present session the necessary legislation to establish the Corps as a permanent agency of the Government.

Expenses of emergency agencies: There are included in the 1938 Budget, pursuant to the direction of Congress at its last session, estimates of appropriations for the administrative expenses of certain emergency agencies and corporations. Such of the emergency agencies and corporations as may be continued by Congress should have all of their expenditure requirements made subject to the same scrutiny that is given by the Bureau of the Budget to the expenditure requirements of the regular departments and establishments; and I recommend that a provision to that effect be included in any future legislation for the continuance of any such agency or corporation.

PART III

REVIEW OF THE FISCAL YEARS 1936 AND 1937 AND THE FISCAL PROGRAM FOR 1938

This review concerns itself with the cash actually received and paid out by the Treasury in the fiscal year 1936, with the estimates of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year 1937, and with the fiscal program for 1938.

Fiscal year 1936

Receipts: Treasury receipts for the year ended June 30, 1936, amounted to $4,115,956,615, about $295,000,000 less than estimated a year ago. As a result of Supreme Court decisions, the Government lost about $457,000,000 in revenue from taxes levied under the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Bituminous Coal Act. Had it not been for the invalidation of these taxes, the total revenues received during the fiscal year 1936 would have exceeded the revenue estimates of a year ago by $162,000,000.

The collection of taxes on carriers and their employees, estimated at $33,000,000, has been deferred to the fiscal year 1937 because of pending litigation. The receipts from income taxes were about $7,500,000 less than last year's estimate.

On the other hand, miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes produced $136,488,000 more than was anticipated; customs revenue, $33,621,000 more; miscellaneous receipts, $32,053,000 more; and realization upon assets, $1,483,000 more.

Expenditures: The total expenditures for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1936 (exclusive of expenditures from postal revenues), amounted to $8,879,798,258, as compared with the estimate of $7,645,301,338 shown in the Budget submitted a year ago. This latter amount did not, however, include $1,673,493,000 for adjusted-compensation payments to veterans. The expenditures for the year, excluding these payments, were, therefore, about $439,000,000 less than the estimate.

The total expenditures for recovery and relief were $2,776,796,469, against an estimate of $2,869,068,187. For the operation and maintenance of the regular departments and establishments of the Government the expenditures amounted to $3,276,872,306, as compared with estimates of $3,482,208,151. For statutory debt retirement there was expended $403,240,150, and for interest on the public debt $749,396,802, the amounts budgeted for these items being $552,025,000 and $742,000,000, respectively.

Deficit and public debt: The gross deficit for the fiscal year 1936 amounted to $4,763,841,642. Excluding $403,240,150 for statutory debt retirement, there was a net deficit of $4,360,601,492. The estimated net deficit, as contained in the Budget submitted a year ago, was $2,682,482,392, a difference of $1,678,119,100. As previously indicated, the original estimate has been affected to the extent of $457,000,000 as a result of the invalidation of taxes levied under the Agricultural Adjustment and Bituminous Coal Acts and by the additional expenditure of $1,673,493,000 under the Adjusted Compensation Act. If it had not been for the increase in the deficit due to these causes, the net deficit for the fiscal year 1936 would have been about $452,000,000 less than that originally estimated.

The increase in the gross public debt during the year amounted to $5,077,650,869, but this sum included an increase of the balance in the general fund of the Treasury of $840,164,664. The gross public debt on June 30, 1936, was $33,778,543,494.

Fiscal year 1937

Receipts: The income of the Federal Government during the fiscal year 1937 will increase sharply over that of 1936. It is expected that the total revenue from all sources (exclusive of postal revenues) will amount to $5,828,151,000. This represents an increase of $1,712,194,000 over the actual receipts for the fiscal year 1936 and an increase of $173,933,000 over the estimates contained in the 1937 Budget, as submitted a year ago.

The general improvement in business conditions and the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1936 have resulted in additional revenues from taxes which will not only make up the loss in revenue due to the Supreme Court decisions invalidating the taxes levied under the Agricultural Adjustment and the Bituminous Coal Acts, but will produce additional income of approximately $174,000,000.

Since the Revenue Act of 1936 materially changes the tax structure, the individual items of revenue, as contained in the original 1937 Budget, will not be exactly comparable with the individual items in the 1937 Budget, as revised in this message.

Income taxes are expected to yield $2,372,900,000, or $946,325,000 more than was received from this source last year; miscellaneous internal revenue, $2,274,968,000, an increase of $265,389,000; customs duties, $446,800,000, an increase of $59,988,000; and realization upon assets, $31,830,000, an increase of $26,362,000. In addition, it is expected that the new tax on unjust enrichment provided by the Revenue Act of 1936 will amount to $82,000,000 and that the tax on carriers and their employees will be $134,552,000, including $33,000,000 deferred from the previous fiscal year. The collection of taxes levied under the Social Security Act will begin in the last half of the fiscal year 1937, and it is expected that these taxes will produce additional revenue in the amount of $324,600,000.

The only item of revenue showing any decrease is that of miscellaneous receipts, in the amount of $50,325,000, which is due to reductions in interest payments made to the Treasury by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Expenditures: From present indications expenditures for the fiscal year 1937 (exclusive of expenditures from postal revenues) will amount to $8,480,804,000. Exclusive of statutory debt retirement and adjusted compensation payments, the total expenditures will amount to $7,512,779,000, an increase over comparable expenditures for 1936 of $709,714,000.

This amount is made up of increases of $371,192,000 on account of the Social Security Act, $85,603,000 on account of interest on the public debt, $194,161,000 for the general public-works program, $123,442,000 for national defense, and $221,914,000 for other purposes; and decreases of $93,321,000 for the Veterans' Administration, $74,996,000 for the agricultural-adjustment program, and $118,281,000 for the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The amount of the recovery and relief expenditures has been estimated at $2,166,157,000, but there is included in the supplemental expenditure items $650,000,000 from an appropriation of $790,000,000 to be requested of Congress for the purpose of carrying the Works Progress Administration and related programs from February 1 to June 30, 1937. This will increase the estimated expenditures for recovery and relief to $2,816,157,000, an increase of $39,361,000 over 1936. The expenditures in the current fiscal year will include, however, the sum of about $165,000,000 for assistance given to individuals and communities directly or indirectly affected by the widespread drought conditions prevailing during the past summer. If this drought had not occurred, the net cost of recovery and relief for the current fiscal year would have been about $125,000,000 below the cost for the previous fiscal year.

Deficit and public debt: The current estimates for the fiscal year 1937 show a gross deficit of $2,652,654,000. Deducting public-debt retirements, the net deficit will be $2,248,129,000.

The increase in the public debt on account of the deficit, however, will be only $1,348,000,000, since it is anticipated that $900,000,000 of the deficit will be financed from cash on hand. The working balance will be further reduced by net expenditures of about $42,000,000 for trust accounts and $100,000,000 for the retirement of national-bank notes now a part of the public debt. This will reduce the working balance from $2,225,000,000 on June 30, 1936, to $1,183,000,000 on June 30, 1937. The gross public debt at the end of the current fiscal year is estimated at $35,026,000,000, an increase over 1936 of $1,248,000,000.

The estimated debt at the end of the fiscal year is based on contemplated expenditures set out in this Budget and does not take into account any change which may occur as a result of the Treasury policy in holding as "inactive" future acquisitions of gold.

Fiscal program for 1938

The expected increase in revenue and decrease in expenditures for relief both reflect the general improvement which has taken place in the economic conditions of the country. The Revenue Act of 1936, which was designed for the purpose of replacing revenue lost through the invalidation of processing taxes, of providing sufficient revenue to amortize the cost of the adjusted-compensation payments, and of equalizing tax burdens, gives every indication of satisfactorily accomplishing those purposes. I should like at this point to emphasize the importance of maintaining the productiveness of the present tax structure, so that we may properly provide for the fulfillment of our fiscal program.

Under legislation enacted during the last session of Congress, which created authorizations for future appropriations aggregating more than $1,500,000,000, there is included about $130,000,000 in the estimates of appropriations contained in this Budget. Such authorizations are contained in the new Federal Highway Act, the Rivers and Harbors and the Flood Control Acts, and the Rural Electrification Act.

There is also included $812,225,000 for social security grants and for the Government's contribution to the old-age reserve account, more than double the expenditures for these purposes in 1937, and there will be for several years still further increases in these requirements. It should be pointed out that these expenditures will be offset to a large extent by the increasing revenues under the Social Security Act.

No estimate of appropriation is presented for the needs of the Civilian Conservation Corps, since its extension beyond March 31 of this year is dependent on the action of Congress. In furtherance of my recommendation for the enactment of legislation to continue it as a permanent agency of the Government, there is included in the "Supplemental items" an amount sufficient to meet the expenditure requirements for the fiscal year 1938.

The following table shows the distribution, on a functional basis, of the expenditure figures contained in this Budget and compares them with similar figures for previous years:

Actual and estimated expenditures of the Government for the fiscal years 1932–38 (classifications include expenditures from both general and emergency funds)

[1] To be increased by any amount appropriated by Congress for recovery and relief for the fiscal year 1938. As indicated in the message, it is hoped the amount will not exceed $1,537,123,000.

[2] Funds for continuation of the Civilian Conservation Corps are included under "Supplemental items."

[3] Excess of credits, deduct.

[4] Excess of revenues, deduct.

Receipts: Treasury receipts in the fiscal year 1938 are expected to reach a total of $7,293,607,000, an increase of $1,465,456,000 over similar receipts for 1937 and $3,177,650,000 over 1936. This gain is largely due to an increase in income taxes as a result of improved business conditions and the operation of the Revenue Act of 1936.

The amount expected to be collected in 1938 from income taxes is $3,365,300,000, a gain of $992,400,000 over the fiscal year 1937. Miscellaneous internal revenue will produce $2,508,332,000, or $233,364,000 more than is expected from this source for 1937. The tax on unjust enrichment and the taxes on carriers and their employees, from which $82,000,000 and $134,552,000, respectively, will be derived in 1937, will produce no revenue in 1938, since under existing law these taxes expire during 1937. The first full year of tax collections under the Social Security Act will result in revenue of $774,800,000 in 1938, which sum is $450,200,000 greater than the anticipated revenue in 1937, when collections will be for only 6 months. It is believed that customs revenues will rise from $446,800,000 during the present fiscal year to $463,000,000 in 1938, a gain of $16,200,000. Miscellaneous receipts, however, will decrease $8,950,000, the 1938 collections being estimated at $151,550,000, as compared with $160,500,000 during 1937. From realization upon assets $30,625,000 will be received, while in 1937 receipts from this source will amount to $31,830,000.

Expenditures: The expenditures for 1938 contemplated under this Budget (exclusive of those from postal revenues) will total $6,157,999,000, or approximately $2,323,000,000 less than is now estimated for 1937. General expenditures for regular activities amount to $5,841,968,000, as compared with $5,664,647,000 in 1937, an increase of $177,321,000. The 1937 estimate, however, contains an amount of $563,500,000 for completion of adjusted compensation payments to veterans, so that the comparable increase over 1937 is $740,821,000. For recovery and relief there is included in the expenditures for 1938 the amount of $316,031,000, which, of course, is not the full amount that will be required for relief during that year. As previously indicated, it is our present hope that the additional amount to be requested for this purpose will not exceed $1,537,123,000. Thus the total expenditure for recovery and relief during 1938 would be $1,853,154,000, or $963,003,000 less than the amount estimated for 1937. Again I emphasize the contribution which employers can make to this attainment.

The general expenditures include $860,000,000 for interest on the public debt, an increase of $25,000,000 over the amount for the present fiscal year, and $401,515,000 for statutory debt retirements, a decrease of $3,010,000. Exclusive of the service on the public debt and the payment of adjusted compensation to veterans, there is a net increase of $718,831,000 in expenditures for regular activities as compared with 1937. This increase is accounted for as follows: For increased requirements under the Social Security Act, $436,337,000; for additional expenditures under the general public works program, $132,519,000; for national defense to provide for the increased strength of the Army as directed by Congress and to provide for replacement of naval vessels in accordance with existing authorizations, $92,882,000; for the necessary funds for the activities of the Railroad Retirement Board and for rural electrification, $39,566,000; and for increased needs of other activities, $17,527,000.

Surplus and public debt: The surplus for the fiscal year 1938, as presented in this Budget, is $1,135,608,000, after providing for debt retirement. Excluding provision for debt retirement, the surplus will amount to $1,537,123,000. As I have previously stated, it is hoped the additional needs for relief during the fiscal year 1938 will not require expenditure of more than this latter amount. On this basis the estimated gross public debt, on June 30, 1938, will be about the same amount as at the close of the fiscal year 1937. This does not take into account any change which may occur as a result of the Treasury policy in holding as "inactive" future acquisitions of gold.

Appropriations: The total appropriations recommended in this Budget aggregate $6,839,000,000, including those for the Postal Service, District of Columbia, and probable supplemental items, while the appropriations already made and prospective supplemental items for the fiscal year 1937, exclusive of requirements for recovery and relief, total $6,261,000,000, an increase of $578,000,000 for 1938. This increase is due to additional appropriations amounting to $309,000,000 on account of the Social Security Act, $80,000,000 required under the general public-works program, and $189,000,000 on account of departmental requirements, including the national defense. The appropriations made and contemplated for recovery and relief for 1937 total $2,215,000,000, whereas it is hoped that corresponding appropriations for 1938 will not exceed $1,537,123,000.

PART IV

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The first section of the 1937 District of Columbia Appropriation Act, approved June 23, 1936 (Public, No. 762, 74th Cong.), contains the following provision:

> Not to exceed $50,000 shall be available for expenditure, under the direction of the President, for making an independent study of the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia and enabling him to report to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session, what, in his judgment, is a fair and equitable amount to be paid by the United States as an annual contribution toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia; such sum shall be available for personal services without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and for such other expenditures as may be necessary in connection with such study.

Pursuant to the above I appointed a director and an advisory committee of three members to conduct an independent study of the various elements and conditions affecting the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia.

The report contains detailed findings and recommendations with the supporting data and information collected from the Federal and District Governments in Washington and from 17 comparable American cities and the capital cities of 21 foreign countries.

The application of the basic principles and recommendations as outlined and detailed in the report is reflected in the following three-point formula, which I recommend be carefully considered by the Congress with a view to enacting such legislation at this session as may be necessary to establish equitable fiscal relationships between the two governments.

> I. Intergovernmental contractual services: Contractual arrangements shall be established for the reimbursement of the cost of specific intergovernmental services supplied either government by the other. Appropriations therefor shall be included in the respective annual departmental budgets.
> II. Capital outlays of joint interest: The National Capital Planning Commission (proposed in the report) shall determine the extent of the respective Federal and District interests in capital outlays and improvements to be included in the District budget.
> III. Per capita governmental costs: Pending the grant of broader powers of local control over purely local affairs, the excess of the District governmental costs per capita over the average of those in comparable cities shall be assumed by the Federal Government: Provided, however, That such excess District governmental costs shall be assumed only after allowance has been made for reimbursements due to unusual costs occasioned by congressional enactments.

I also recommend that, concurrently with enactment of any legislation which carries into effect the provisions of this continuing formula, the substantive law providing for annual Federal contributions of a fixed percentage of District appropriations be repealed and that the system of annual Federal lump-sum contributions be abandoned.

The application of this formula to the 1938 Budget estimates would provide for a net reimbursement by the Federal Government to the District of Columbia of $2,533,357, made up as follows:

I. Intergovernmental contractual services	$1,996,407
II. Capital outlays	536,950
III. Excess per capita District of Columbia governmental costs
Total	2,533,357

After the application of the formula there will still be a deficit in the general revenue account of the District of Columbia of about $9,800,000, which will make it necessary, of course, to provide additional revenue. Sources of additional revenue are indicated in the report.

FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. 12)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report on the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, with illustrations, as follows:

A message from the President of the United States transmitting the report on Fiscal Relations Between the United States and the District of Columbia for the consideration of the Seventy-fifth Congress

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., January 8, 1937.

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions in the 1937 District of Columbia Appropriation Act approved June 23, 1936 (Public, No. 762, 74th Cong.), I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress the following report on Fiscal Relations Between the United States and the District of Columbia.

The major recommendations in this report are outlined in my 1938 Budget message as transmitted to you on this date. I have considered these findings and recommendations in collaboration with the Advisory Committee and the Director of the Study, and I earnestly commend these to your close consideration at this session of Congress. I urge early enactment of the necessary legislative measures to assure a continuing equitable determination of fiscal relations between the two governments.

Special attention is invited to sections 10 and 13, which show that while the extent of local governmental services in the District of Columbia is substantially equal to that in 17 comparable cities, both the property tax and the total tax load in the District of Columbia are lower than in any of these cities.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

By unanimous consent, the following business was transacted:

TAX EXEMPTION ON TICKETS FOR INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. KING. From the Committee on Finance, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 18, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 18) to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937 was read as follows:

> Resolved, etc., That all amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies of the Inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937, said committee to be appointed with the approval of the President-elect, shall be exempt from the tax on admissions imposed by section 500 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, all the net proceeds from the sale of said tickets to be donated by the said committee to charity.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in explanation of the joint resolution. It is an emergency measure which provides for the exemption from tax of the tickets for seats which are sold for the inaugural ceremonies. It is the usual joint resolution adopted in all like circumstances.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the request of the Senator from Utah does not come within the sphere of my usual objection. I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Utah, and I am in accord with his desire for present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. I may say that the joint resolution is supported unanimously by the members of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

QUARTERING OF TROOPS PARTICIPATING IN INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. CONNALLY. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I report back favorably without amendment Senate Joint Resolution 17, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) to provide for the quartering in certain public buildings in the District of Columbia of troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allocate such space in any public building under his care and supervision as he deems necessary for the purposes of quartering troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies to be held on January 20, 1937, but such use shall not continue after January 22, 1937. Authority granted by this resolution may be exercised notwithstanding the provisions of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved April 28, 1902, prohibiting the use of public buildings in connection with inaugural ceremonies.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the joint resolution provides that the Secretary of the Interior, as the custodian of public buildings, shall be authorized to allocate as he may deem necessary certain public buildings for the purpose of quartering troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 17?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE LATE SENATOR COUZENS, OF MICHIGAN

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, since last the Senate gathered in previous session death has stricken JAMES COUZENS, late the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan.

He needs no eulogy, because his monument is in his works.

Himself a man of effective deeds, rather than of words, he would be the last to welcome fulsome praise. He would want the record to speak for itself. But those of us who knew him well and labored with him—as was my intimate privilege for 8 Senate years—owe it to candor and to the just appreciation of a great and unusual character that the book should not be closed without at least a brief summation of the facts and the realities.

Whether in the field of competitive business, where he scaled the heights of industrial power and authority; whether in the gentler forums of philanthropy, where he was the best and most generous friend that underprivileged children ever had; whether on the battlefields of public service, where he ever sought what he believed to be the mass advantage, he left his "sterling" mark indelibly upon everything he touched.

He was peculiarly the personal embodiment of vigor, courage, integrity, industry, independence, and self-reliance—relentlessly devoted to any task which won his loyalty. No more positive and rugged personality has influenced our time. Even those who strongly disagreed with him could not withhold their acknowledgment that when once his course was chosen and set he never wavered—regardless of consequences—to journey's end.

He was equally the personification of kindly, selfless affection and constructive compassion for the downtrodden, the poor, and the unfortunate—particularly devoted, in heart and prodigal purse, to stricken youth. This sympathy dominated both his public dedications and his private benefactions. His Commonwealth of Michigan is dotted with healing sanctuaries which silently but eloquently bespeak his merciful aid. These "carry on" in his tradition though their generous patron is at rest.

His amazing and colorful career, from Canadian immigrant to 14 years of honored and honorable service in the Senate of the United States, from an humble car checker on the railroads in Detroit to partnership with Henry Ford in the greatest single industrial triumph of all time, from the pinch of meagerest means to the affluence of a great fortune—all this is the epic drama of American opportunity at its maximum. All this is self-made life in its fullest tide.

Such men do not often come our way. Such careers rarely exist outside of story books. Such a death deserves the Senate's apostrophe in this memorial moment of farewell.

Senator COUZENS was born in Chatham, Ontario, August 26, 1872. He died in Detroit on October 22, 1936, after a long battle with ill health, which he bore with typical stoic bravery. The 64-year interim was crowded with such drama and achievement as rarely chapters one human life. In 1890 he came to Detroit and labored in a freight yard. Five years later he was in the office and on his way. Three years later he was married to the faithful, gracious, and devoted helpmate of his life. Five more years—he met Henry Ford and Detroit's industrial miracle began. He became the dynamic secretary and business manager of the new Ford Co., which was swiftly to become the prodigy of modern times. Sixteen relatively short but vivid years, through which he fought his way to industrial fame, and he retired with a great fortune as his reward for carrying his full part of a colossal burden to the goals of unprecedented success.

Meanwhile his flair for public service already had appeared. In 1913 he served as a street-railway commissioner, announcing immediately his devotion to ultimate municipal ownership, which he subsequently achieved. Three years later he became police commissioner, and it is a part of Detroit's municipal history that organized vice promptly met and surrendered to its unyielding master. In 1918 he was elected mayor and a model administration laid the foundations for the greater Detroit which he knew lay ahead. Four years later he was appointed to a vacancy in the United States Senate, and here he served effectively until his death.

These are but the major entries on the swift-moving calendar of a busy and fruitful and dramatic life. We may sketch them in a passing moment. But behind the sketch lies character and will power and integrity and judgment and tenacious purpose and tireless energy and indefatigable industry. Such things do not consecutively happen by mere accident. However kindly fate may be, such a record reflects the genius of the man himself.

It is inevitable that positive men should, upon occasion, clash with others. It was inevitable that this man should have this emphasized experience. Sharp political differences were part of his intense career. But even those with whom he most violently disagreed respecting policies and decisions did not hesitate to pay tribute to the man himself when the final great accounting came—just as Senators who, upon this floor, may have often differed with his viewpoints, are at one with the closest of his colleagues in tribute to his character, his honor, his courage, his independence, and his worth.

When he spoke on the Senate floor his words were brief, pungent, and pointed, and always commanded attention and respect and influence. No Senator ever was more active or more aggressive in committee work and in the development of important legislation. He was the ranking minority member on the Finance Committee and similarly on the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the latter of which he ably served as chairman when his party was in power. At the time of his death he also was serving on the Banking and Currency Committee and the District of Columbia Committee. He was utterly faithful in attendance upon all of his committee labors, and no problem within his jurisdiction escaped the searching, constructive, fearless scrutiny of his vigilant study. Rarely did he miss a roll call on the Senate floor despite the infirmities of his final years. His influence affected many major legislative trends. Indeed, it often initiated far-reaching legislative movements.

Always and forever he fought whatever he deemed to be special privilege. Always and forever he championed what he believed to be mass advantage for the men and women who toil. It was the passion of his public life.

One commentator in high place correctly said, upon his passing, that "his independence meant more to him than any gift within the power of the people"—and added, in homely but truthful praise, that "as a Senator he voted his conscience and not his bank account."

The President of the United States declared:

> In the death of Senator COUZENS the Senate of the United States and the people of Michigan and the Nation have lost a leader whose convictions were a part of the best that America aspires for and whose courage was a match for his idealism.
> Senator COUZENS did not enter public life because he sought either fame or power, but rather because of a service he believed he could render to the cause of progressive thought and political uprightness. He was a party member, but his prior obligation was to the well-being of the people whom he served. He never hesitated in that service.
> The death of Senator COUZENS to me is a great loss. But more than that it is a great loss to the multitudes of Americans whose needs and problems were always in the forefront of his thought and action.

No epitaph could say more. It is the true assessment of a notable life and service. The Senator is gone. But he still lives in the tremendous benefactions which he generously showered upon his State; in the annals of a commerce in which he triumphantly pioneered; in the accomplishments of a public service which was rich in its influence and achievement; and in the records of the Senate, where his imprint will linger while memory remains.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. President, I would not venture to speak in the Senate today, my third day in this body, if I did not feel it to be my duty to the late Senator COUZENS to do so.

Senator COUZENS was my friend; I do not think I would be here today if it had not been for his endorsement of me in the recent election. His death removes from American public life one of the most extraordinary figures of our time. I will not dwell upon his business success, but I am going to relate a little incident which he narrated to me in his home just about 3 months ago today. He told me of the sale of his stock in the Ford Motor Co. some 15 or 20 years before. A friend, John Lodge, who was afterward mayor of Detroit, a close associate of Senator COUZENS, was shown the check for $29,000,000 by the Senator with, I think, some degree of pardonable pride. Mr. COUZENS said, "John, what do you think of that check?" Mr. Lodge replied, "Mr. Commissioner"—Senator COUZENS was then the police commissioner of the city of Detroit—"let me carry that around for a little while, will you?" Mr. COUZENS let him have the check. He brought it back the next day and said, "Do you know, Mr. Commissioner, how much it cost you to let me carry that check around for a day? At the bank interest, about $2,400 a day—$100 an hour." The Senator turned to me and he said, "BROWN, I did not realize how much money it was until then."

Mr. President, the passing of Senator COUZENS removed from the State and Nation one of our most vigorous characters. He was equally successful in the business and in the political world. Politics in the ordinary sense of the term did not interest him. He went into politics through the only avenue then open in Michigan—the Republican Party. He took no part in political organizations. He never attended a political convention. He did feel that as a Senator from Michigan he could accomplish something for his country and his State. The Senate and the Nation know the result. He was nationally minded; the interests of the Nation came first. Some of his most courageous acts called forth extremely bitter criticism from interested groups in his own State. He, nevertheless, took care of the interests of Michigan.

A rather brusque exterior concealed a most generous nature. He was certainly the greatest benefactor of the needy and helpless in the history of my State; probably the greatest in the Nation. He gave away over $30,000,000—more than he retained for himself and his family. It was not entirely a methodical, disinterested, impersonal giving. The needs of the moment deeply affected him. In May 1927, at Bath, Mich., occurred one of the most dastardly crimes in the history of the Nation. Forty-four children in school were killed and many injured by the blasting of a bomb placed by a probably demented and disappointed township school official. Senator COUZENS rebuilt the school and repaired, so far as he could by further generosity to the stricken families, the injury done. Many are the stories which are now being told of his generosity to individuals.

In the business world a hard taskmaster, he was, nevertheless, chiefly responsible for the great increase in wages which occurred in the automobile industry in Michigan.

As our people scan the list of the illustrious dead of the great State of Michigan, they are placing at the head the name of our friend, the great business executive, statesman, and humanitarian, JAMES COUZENS. This generation admires him; the coming generation will love him; for after his own family his chief concern was the children of Michigan. As a Detroit newspaper said:

> Michigan mourns in him a man and a public servant who always did ably and wholeheartedly what he thought was right.

Every man and woman in this august assembly knows that I speak the simple truth when I say he was honest, he was courageous, he was charitable.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, the fitting and eloquent eulogies delivered by the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the junior Senator from the same State [Mr. BROWN] need no supplementation at my hands. I had not intended until a moment ago to make any observation.

My relationship with the late Senator COUZENS existed over a period of many years, and it was intimate. My love for him was deep. He was a man of the highest character and probity, a generous philanthropist, a patriotic citizen of the loftiest type. During the remainder of my years I shall bear a sweet memory of the fine friendship that existed between the two of us. I think his life is sketched by the immortal bard who said:

> He was * * * lofty and sour to them that loved him not,
> But to those that loved him sweet as summer.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, by a peculiar coincidence the late Senator COUZENS, of Michigan, and I were born on the same day. In our conversations we often mentioned that fact. During the course of our joint service in the Senate we became very intimate friends.

It is seldom that an individual achieves notable success in two distinct spheres of activity. As has been pointed out by both the Senators from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG and Mr. BROWN], the efforts of the late Senator COUZENS in the business world met with very remarkable success. This prompts me to say that the capacity to accumulate wealth often seems to involve a distinct although somewhat indefinable faculty. We have all noted that there are those whose every move and every effort apparently are rewarded with profit. The late Senator COUZENS demonstrated that peculiar faculty. He made money and possessed, during the late years of his life, a very large fortune.

He was not only successful in the business world, but, as has been disclosed by the remarks of other Senators, he was almost equally successful in the world of public affairs, in politics. But the one thought that I would leave with my hearers is that his success in both spheres of activity was in spite of rather than because of the personal characteristics which usually mark men who triumph in the business world, in private business and in public business.

Usually, I think, as a natural consequence of long-continued attention to what are unavoidably selfish interests in the accumulation of wealth one loses or fails to develop those elements of personal character and that disposition which are essential to the enjoyment of life. So in a long political career it has come to be my conclusion, from a somewhat careful study of the subject, that the tendency is to develop selfishness.

I shall not elaborate that thought; but it may be of sufficient interest to those who hear me to prompt them to pursue my assertions with a view to reaching their own conclusions. I reiterate that if one gives himself over to the practice of seeking office repeatedly and through a long period of time, he usually develops a distinct measure of selfishness, one of the natural tendencies against which public men often struggle; and if they fail to combat it they are less pleasing to their companions and really less useful in some respects at the end of their careers than they were at the beginning.

There is no doubt, as has been said on this occasion with force and with eloquence, that the late Senator COUZENS was independent and that he was courageous. He demonstrated his independence on this floor, and particularly in his committee work. It is not necessary to review the occasions on which his courage and his independence were displayed in this body and in the committees to which he was assigned for labor by the Senate. The pleasing memory that I have of my departed friend does not so much come from those aggressive and sterling elements of character as from the singular and very notable fact that, in spite of his triumph in business and in spite of his success in politics, he was one of the most generous and sympathetic men it has been my privilege to know. If proof of that fact were desired, it is to be found in the addresses of the two Senators from Michigan, who have recounted the circumstances that throughout the period of his prosperity, when an ordinary man would have been engaged in promoting his own interests to the exclusion of those kindly activities which denote the philanthropist, the late Senator COUZENS was giving of his wealth and of his exceptional intelligence to the betterment of the condition of the underprivileged, for whom at all times he displayed tender sympathy.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words with respect to JAMES COUZENS, late a Senator from Michigan.

Since I have been a Member of this body I have served on the Finance Committee of the Senate with Senator COUZENS. Not only did I have high admiration for his ability and great respect for his character and courage but there grew up between us a very deep personal affection.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have today reintroduced a proposal (S. J. Res. 25) to amend the Constitution so that the United States and State Governments may tax the income from securities issued by either the United States or any State security-issuing body.

My amendment would not apply to security issues already made. There also is a provision allowing issuance of tax-exempt securities, exempt for a period of 5 years from taxation by either the United States or State Governments, under the exigencies of war.

The issuance of tax-exempt securities should have been stopped years ago, certainly when the income-tax amendment providing for high income taxes was adopted. In this connection I desire to quote from an analysis prepared and published by the Industrial Conference Board. This report says, in part:

> The existence of a large volume of tax-exempt securities in a country in which high income-tax rates are imposed is thoroughly undesirable. A substantial amount of income escapes taxation entirely, and even an approximate application of the principle of ability to pay becomes impossible.
> The corollary effects are equally important. Rates for Federal and municipal credit are favorably affected, since the basis of an investor's comparison with other obligations is the net yield rather than the gross yield. Excessive borrowing by political units must in some degree be attributed to the exemption feature. Moreover, Government and private business can never be on an equal basis in the capital and credit markets so long as tax exemption is continued. Inevitably, therefore, there is a tendency for Government to take over certain activities that might otherwise be left to private enterprise.
> It is now obvious to students of Federal taxation that tax-exempt securities should have been eliminated by a constitutional amendment at or about the time the sixteenth amendment was adopted.

Mr. President, that is not all the case against tax-exempt securities by a good deal, but it sets forth very well the reasons why business and industry should be opposed to the further issuance of tax-exempt securities.

Here are some other effects of tax-exempt securities that put them in the class of things contrary to the public interest and to the interest of the ordinary citizen and small businessman:

A large portion of property, represented by Government and municipal securities—these now total something over forty thousand million dollars—escapes taxation, thereby causing a great loss of revenue to governments. Billions of dollars of wealth escapes payment of its fair share of the burdens of government by investment in tax-exempt securities. Tax-exempt securities violate the sound principle of ability to pay and unfairly discriminate among taxpayers.

The presence of tax-exempt securities in the market discourages investment in new enterprises, and it is highly desirable that such investments be encouraged, not discouraged.

Tax-exempt securities tend to encourage extravagance in government and governmental agencies, and such extravagance should be discouraged, not encouraged.

Tax-exempt securities are in effect private subsidies and special privileges, and are contrary to sound public policy.

By withdrawing money from private enterprises, tax-exempt securities increase the rate of interest required for all enterprises not carried on by government, and thereby add to the cost of living as well as the cost of doing business.

The present administration, as I understand, has declared the issuance of tax-exempt securities unsound and undesirable, especially from the social viewpoint. Its evils were pointed out several years ago by Andrew W. Mellon, then Secretary of the Treasury. A similar position, I believe, has been taken by nearly every student of sound fiscal policies.

I say the time has come to do more than declare tax-exempt securities unsound and contrary to public policy. I say the Congress should take steps to end their issuance, and I hope that this Congress will submit my amendment, or one along the same lines, to the States for early ratification. I intend to press for action on this proposal.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 8, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, supremely just and pure, create within us a ruling passion to walk worthy of the vocation wherewith we are called. In a world that is trouble rent, in a day that is sorely confused, give the Congress the larger vision, the broader fields of endeavor involved in the brotherhood of mankind. We pray that devotion to home, State, and Nation may burn clean and deep in all breasts. Take, our Father, into Thy care and keeping our President, our Speaker, and these representatives of a great people. Direct them in all the intricate problems that may arise, that the genius of our Republic may more and more obtain. We thank Thee for the Teacher of Nazareth, the light of the world, the light that never goes out, but burns glowingly on and on until earth's darkness fades away into the radiance of eternal dawn. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, January 6, 1937, was read and approved.

THE BUDGET (H. DOC. NO. 29)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, on motion of Mr. RAYBURN, the message and the accompanying papers were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to provisions of law I transmit herewith the Budget of the United States Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, together with this message, which is a part thereof. The estimates have been developed after careful analysis of the revenues, obligations, and reasonable needs of the Government, and I recommend appropriations for the purposes specifically detailed herein.

PART I

The programs inaugurated during the last 4 years to combat the depression and to initiate many needed reforms have cost large sums of money, but the benefits obtained from them are far outweighing all their costs. We shall soon be reaping the full benefits of those programs and shall have at the same time a balanced Budget that will also include provision for reduction of the public debt.

The fiscal plans of the Federal Government for these 4 years have been formulated with two objectives in mind. Our first was to restore a successful economic life to the country, by providing greater employment and purchasing power for the people, by stimulating a more balanced use of our productive capacity, and by increasing the national income and distributing it on a wider base of prosperity. Our second was to gain new advantages of permanent value for the American people. Both of these objectives can be accomplished under a sound financial policy.

Business conditions have shown each year since 1933 a marked improvement over the preceding year. Employment in private industry is increasing. Industrial production, factory pay rolls, and farm prices have steadily risen.

These gains make it possible to reduce for the fiscal year 1938 many expenditures of the Federal Government which the general depression made necessary. Although we must continue to spend substantial sums to provide work for those whom industry has not yet absorbed, the 1938 Budget is in balance; and, except for debt reduction of $401,515,000, it will remain in balance even if later on there are included additional expenditures of as much as $1,537,123,000 for recovery and relief. We expect, moreover, if improvement in economic conditions continues at the present rate, to be able to attain in 1939 a completely balanced Budget, with full provision for meeting the statutory requirements for debt reduction.

In carrying out this policy the American people are obtaining lasting benefits. Economic protection of the aged and physically handicapped is being secured through the operations of the Social Security Act. Ability of the farmer to obtain a more constant livelihood has been enhanced by the enactment of legislation especially designed for that purpose. The home owner has been benefited through the financing of mortgages at reasonable rates of interest. Investors in securities are being given a larger measure of protection by the Securities and Exchange Act. The market for corporate securities has been restored, and industry has been able to finance its long-term requirements on a favorable basis. The rights of labor are being materially advanced through operation of the National Labor Relations Act.

I plan to submit at a later date an estimate of appropriation for additional relief for the fiscal year 1938, which I hope will not exceed the amount of $1,537,123,000, previously mentioned. This hope is based on the assumption that industry will cooperate in employing men and women from the relief rolls in larger numbers than during the past year. Many of those in charge of industrial management, recognizing their obligation to the Nation, have furnished a large measure of employment to the jobless. Today, while it is true that in some sections of the country certain types of skilled workers are still seeking employment, it is nevertheless a fact that the great majority of those now receiving relief belong to the unskilled group. It is my conviction that if every employer or potential employer will undertake during the next 6 months to give employment to persons now receiving Government help, the National Budget can thereafter be kept definitely in balance. Without such cooperation on the part of employers, the question of a balanced Budget for 1938 must of necessity remain an open one, for the very good reason that this Government does not propose next year, any more than during the past 4 years, to allow American families to starve.

To continue the gains we are making and to accomplish in the 1939 Budget a complete balance between receipts and expenditures including debt reduction, we must now lay the groundwork of our future fiscal policy.

While relief expenditures should decline with greater reemployment, the normal growth of the country naturally reflects itself in increased costs of government. Many of the old functions and duties of government naturally cost more as the industrial and agricultural activities to which they are related expand in volume. The cost of new functions and duties can be substantially reduced only by curtailing the function or the duty. I propose shortly to submit to the Congress a broad plan for placing the executive branch of the Government on a sounder and more responsible basis of management. The carrying out of such a plan will undoubtedly result in some saving in expenditures; but it must be remembered that what is generally known as overhead represents only a small fraction of total expenditures in any large business, Government or private.

Expenditures must be planned with a view to the national needs; and no expansion of Government activities should be authorized unless the necessity for such expansion has been definitely determined and funds are available to defray the cost. In other words, if new legislation imposes any substantial increase in expenditures either in the expansion of existing or the creation of new activities, it becomes a matter of sound policy simultaneously to provide new revenue sufficient to meet the additional cost. The success of such a policy can be assured only through the full and friendly cooperation of the Congress and the Executive. Of this cooperation I am confident.

PART II

RECOMMENDATIONS

Temporary miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes: I recommend that the Congress take steps by suitable legislation to extend the miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes which under existing law will expire next June and July, and also to maintain the current rates of those taxes which would otherwise be reduced next June. I consider that the revenue from such taxes or its equivalent is necessary for the financing of the Budget for 1938.

Postal receipts: The estimates of appropriations for the Postal Service included in the 1938 Budget are predicated upon the continuance during that fiscal year of the 3-cent postage rate for first-class mail other than for local delivery. While the Government makes a profit on first-class mail, the Postal Service is not self-supporting, because it carries other classes of mail at a considerable loss, as shown in the tabular footnote on page XXIII. It should be the definite policy of the Government to operate the Postal Service out of postal receipts, and a continuation of the 3-cent rate will be a necessary step toward the accomplishment of this purpose.

Civilian Conservation Corps: The Civilian Conservation Corps has demonstrated its usefulness and has met with general public approval. It should be continued. I intend shortly to submit a supplemental estimate of appropriation to carry the Corps from March 31, 1937, to the end of the current fiscal year; and I strongly recommend that Congress enact during its present session the necessary legislation to establish the Corps as a permanent agency of the Government.

Expenses of emergency agencies: There are included in the 1938 Budget, pursuant to the direction of Congress at its last session, estimates of appropriations for the administrative expenses of certain emergency agencies and corporations. Such of the emergency agencies and corporations as may be continued by Congress should have all of their expenditure requirements made subject to the same scrutiny that is given by the Bureau of the Budget to the expenditure requirements of the regular departments and establishments; and I recommend that a provision to that effect be included in any future legislation for the continuance of any such agency or corporation.

PART III

REVIEW OF THE FISCAL YEARS 1936 AND 1937, AND THE FISCAL PROGRAM FOR 1938

This review concerns itself with the cash actually received and paid out by the Treasury in the fiscal year 1936, with the estimates of receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year 1937, and with the fiscal program for 1938.

Fiscal year 1936

Receipts: Treasury receipts for the year ended June 30, 1936, amounted to $4,115,956,615, about $295,000,000 less than estimated a year ago. As a result of Supreme Court decisions, the Government lost about $457,000,000 in revenue from taxes levied under the Agricultural Adjustment Act and the Bituminous Coal Act. Had it not been for the invalidation of these taxes, the total revenues received during the fiscal year 1936 would have exceeded the revenue estimates of a year ago by $162,000,000.

The collection of taxes on carriers and their employees, estimated at $33,000,000, has been deferred to the fiscal year 1937 because of pending litigation. The receipts from income taxes were about $7,500,000 less than last year's estimate.

On the other hand, miscellaneous internal-revenue taxes produced $136,488,000 more than was anticipated; customs revenue, $33,621,000 more; miscellaneous receipts, $32,053,000 more; and realization upon assets, $1,483,000 more.

Expenditures: The total expenditures for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1936 (exclusive of expenditures from postal revenues), amounted to $8,879,798,258, as compared with the estimate of $7,645,301,338 shown in the Budget submitted a year ago. This latter amount did not, however, include $1,673,493,000 for adjusted compensation payments to veterans. The expenditures for the year, excluding these payments, were, therefore, about $439,000,000 less than the estimate.

The total expenditures for recovery and relief were $2,776,796,469 against an estimate of $2,869,068,187. For the operation and maintenance of the regular departments and establishments of the Government the expenditures amounted to $3,276,872,306, as compared with estimates of $3,482,208,151. For statutory debt retirement there was expended $403,240,150, and for interest on the public debt, $749,396,802, the amounts budgeted for these items being $552,025,000 and $742,000,000, respectively.

Deficit and public debt: The gross deficit for the fiscal year 1936 amounted to $4,763,841,642. Excluding $403,240,150 for statutory debt retirement, there was a net deficit of $4,360,601,492. The estimated net deficit, as contained in the Budget submitted a year ago, was $2,682,482,392, a difference of $1,678,119,100. As previously indicated, the original estimate has been affected to the extent of $457,000,000 as a result of the invalidation of taxes levied under the Agricultural Adjustment and Bituminous Coal Acts and by the additional expenditure of $1,673,493,000 under the Adjusted Compensation Act. If it had not been for the increase in the deficit due to these causes, the net deficit for the fiscal year 1936 would have been about $452,000,000 less than that originally estimated.

The increase in the gross public debt during the year amounted to $5,077,650,869, but this sum included an increase of the balance in the general fund of the Treasury of $840,164,664. The gross public debt on June 30, 1936, was $33,778,543,494.

Fiscal year 1937

Receipts: The income of the Federal Government during the fiscal year 1937 will increase sharply over that of 1936. It is expected that the total revenue from all sources (exclusive of postal revenues) will amount to $5,828,151,000. This represents an increase of $1,712,194,000 over the actual receipts for the fiscal year 1936 and an increase of $173,933,000 over the estimates contained in the 1937 Budget, as submitted a year ago.

The general improvement in business conditions and the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1936 have resulted in additional revenues from taxes which will not only make up the loss in revenue due to the Supreme Court decisions invalidating the taxes levied under the Agricultural Adjustment and the Bituminous Coal Acts, but will produce additional income of approximately $174,000,000.

Since the Revenue Act of 1936 materially changes the tax structure, the individual items of revenue as contained in the original 1937 Budget will not be exactly comparable with the individual items in the 1937 Budget as revised in this message.

Income taxes are expected to yield $2,372,900,000, or $946,325,000 more than was received from this source last year; miscellaneous internal revenue, $2,274,968,000, an increase of $265,389,000; customs duties, $446,800,000, an increase of $59,988,000; and realization upon assets, $31,830,000, an increase of $26,362,000. In addition, it is expected that the new tax on unjust enrichment provided by the Revenue Act of 1936 will amount to $82,000,000 and that the tax on carriers and their employees will be $134,552,000, including $33,000,000 deferred from the previous fiscal year. The collection of taxes levied under the Social Security Act will begin in the last half of the fiscal year 1937, and it is expected that these taxes will produce additional revenue in the amount of $324,600,000.

The only item of revenue showing any decrease is that of miscellaneous receipts, in the amount of $50,325,000, which is due to reductions in interest payments made to the Treasury by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Expenditures: From present indications expenditures for the fiscal year 1937 (exclusive of expenditures from postal revenues) will amount to $8,480,804,000. Exclusive of statutory debt retirement and adjusted-compensation payments, the total expenditures will amount to $7,512,779,000, an increase over comparable expenditures for 1936 of $709,714,000.

This amount is made up of increases of $371,192,000 on account of the Social Security Act, $85,603,000 on account of interest on the public debt, $194,161,000 for the general public-works program, $123,442,000 for national defense, and $221,914,000 for other purposes; and decreases of $93,321,000 for the Veterans' Administration, $74,996,000 for the agricultural adjustment program, and $118,281,000 for the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The amount of the recovery and relief expenditures has been estimated at $2,166,157,000, but there is included in the supplemental expenditure items $650,000,000 from an appropriation of $790,000,000 to be requested of Congress for the purpose of carrying the Works Progress Administration and related programs from February 1 to June 30, 1937. This will increase the estimated expenditures for recovery and relief to $2,816,157,000, an increase of $39,361,000 over 1936. The expenditures in the current fiscal year will include, however, the sum of about $165,000,000 for assistance given to individuals and communities directly or indirectly affected by the widespread drought conditions prevailing during the past summer. If this drought had not occurred, the net cost of recovery and relief for the current fiscal year would have been about $125,000,000 below the cost for the previous fiscal year.

Deficit and public debt: The current estimates for the fiscal year 1937 show a gross deficit of $2,652,654,000. Deducting public debt retirements, the net deficit will be $2,248,129,000.

The increase in the public debt on account of the deficit, however, will be only $1,348,090,000 since it is anticipated that $900,000,000 of the deficit will be financed from cash on hand. The working balance will be further reduced by net expenditures of about $42,000,000 for trust accounts and $100,000,000 for the retirement of national bank notes now a part of the public debt. This will reduce the working balance from $2,225,000,000 on June 30, 1936, to $1,183,000,000 on June 30, 1937. The gross public debt at the end of the current fiscal year is estimated at $35,026,000,000, an increase over 1936 of $1,248,000,000.

The estimated debt at the end of the fiscal year is based on contemplated expenditures set out in this Budget and does not take into account any change which may occur as a result of the Treasury policy in holding as "inactive" future acquisitions of gold.

Fiscal program for 1938

The expected increase in revenue and decrease in expenditures for relief both reflect the general improvement which has taken place in the economic conditions of the country. The Revenue Act of 1936, which was designed for the purpose of replacing revenue lost through the invalidation of processing taxes, of providing sufficient revenue to amortize the cost of the adjusted-compensation payments, and of equalizing tax burdens, gives every indication of satisfactorily accomplishing those purposes. I should like, at this point, to emphasize the importance of maintaining the productiveness of the present-tax structure, so that we may properly provide for the fulfillment of our fiscal program.

Under legislation enacted during the last session of Congress, which created authorizations for future appropriations aggregating more than $1,500,000,000, there is included about $130,000,000 in the estimates of appropriations contained in this Budget. Such authorizations are contained in the new Federal Highway Act, the Rivers and Harbors and the Flood Control Acts, and the Rural Electrification Act.

There is also included $812,225,000 for social security grants and for the Government's contribution to the old-age reserve account, more than double the expenditures for these purposes in 1937, and there will be for several years still further increases in these requirements. It should be pointed out that these expenditures will be offset to a large extent by the increasing revenues under the Social Security Act.

No estimate of appropriation is presented for the needs of the Civilian Conservation Corps, since its extension beyond March 31 of this year is dependent on the action of Congress. In furtherance of my recommendation for the enactment of legislation to continue it as a permanent agency of the Government, there is included in the "Supplemental items" an amount sufficient to meet the expenditure requirements for the fiscal year 1938.

The following table shows the distribution, on a functional basis, of the expenditure figures contained in this Budget and compares them with similar figures for previous years:

[3] Excess of credits, deduct.

[4] Excess of revenues, deduct.

Receipts: Treasury receipts in the fiscal year 1938 are expected to reach a total of $7,293,607,000, an increase of $1,465,456,000 over similar receipts for 1937 and $3,177,650,000 over 1936. This gain is largely due to an increase in income taxes as a result of improved business conditions and the operation of the Revenue Act of 1936.

The amount expected to be collected in 1938 from income taxes is $3,365,300,000, a gain of $992,400,000 over the fiscal year 1937. Miscellaneous internal revenue will produce $2,508,332,000, or $233,364,000 more than is expected from this source for 1937. The tax on unjust enrichment and the taxes on carriers and their employees, from which $82,000,000 and $134,552,000, respectively, will be derived in 1937, will produce no revenue in 1938, since under existing law these taxes expire during 1937. The first full year of tax collections under the Social Security Act will result in revenue of $774,800,000 in 1938, which sum is $450,200,000 greater than the anticipated revenue in 1937, when collections will be for only 6 months. It is believed that customs revenues will rise from $446,800,000 during the present fiscal year to $463,000,000 in 1938, a gain of $16,200,000. Miscellaneous receipts, however, will decrease $8,950,000, the 1938 collections being estimated at $151,550,000, as compared with $160,500,000 during 1937. From realization upon assets $30,625,000 will be received, while in 1937 receipts from this source will amount to $31,830,000.

Expenditures: The expenditures for 1938 contemplated under this Budget (exclusive of those from postal revenues) will total $6,157,999,000, or approximately $2,323,000,000 less than is now estimated for 1937. General expenditures for regular activities amount to $5,841,968,000, as compared with $5,664,647,000 in 1937, an increase of $177,321,000. The 1937 estimate, however, contains an amount of $563,500,000 for completion of adjusted compensation payments to veterans, so that the comparable increase over 1937 is $740,821,000. For recovery and relief there is included in the expenditures for 1938 the amount of $316,031,000, which, of course, is not the full amount that will be required for relief during that year. As previously indicated, it is our present hope that the additional amount to be requested for this purpose will not exceed $1,537,123,000. Thus the total expenditure for recovery and relief during 1938 would be $1,853,154,000, or $963,003,000 less than the amount estimated for 1937. Again I emphasize the contribution which employers can make to this attainment.

The general expenditures include $860,000,000 for interest on the public debt, an increase of $25,000,000 over the amount for the present fiscal year, and $401,515,000 for statutory debt retirements, a decrease of $3,010,000. Exclusive of the service on the public debt and the payment of adjusted compensation to veterans, there is a net increase of $718,831,000 in expenditures for regular activities as compared with 1937. This increase is accounted for as follows: For increased requirements under the Social Security Act, $436,337,000; for additional expenditures under the general public works program, $132,519,000; for national defense to provide for the increased strength of the Army as directed by Congress and to provide for replacement of naval vessels in accordance with existing authorizations, $92,882,000; for the necessary funds for the activities of the Railroad Retirement Board and for rural electrification, $39,566,000; and for increased needs of other activities, $17,527,000.

Surplus and public debt: The surplus for the fiscal year 1938, as presented in this Budget, is $1,135,608,000 after providing for debt retirement. Excluding provision for debt retirement, the surplus will amount to $1,537,123,000. As I have previously stated, it is hoped the additional needs for relief during the fiscal year 1938 will not require expenditure of more than this latter amount. On this basis the estimated gross public debt on June 30, 1938, will be about the same amount as at the close of the fiscal year 1937. This does not take into account any change which may occur as a result of the Treasury policy in holding as "inactive" future acquisitions of gold.

Appropriations: The total appropriations recommended in this Budget aggregate $6,839,000,000, including those for the Postal Service, District of Columbia, and probable supplemental items, while the appropriations already made and prospective supplemental items for the fiscal year 1937, exclusive of requirements for recovery and relief, total $6,261,000,000, an increase of $578,000,000 for 1938. This increase is due to additional appropriations amounting to $309,000,000 on account of the Social Security Act; $80,000,000 required under the general public works program; and $189,000,000 on account of departmental requirements, including the national defense. The appropriations made and contemplated for recovery and relief for 1937 total $2,215,000,000, whereas it is hoped that corresponding appropriations for 1938 will not exceed $1,537,123,000.

PART IV

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The first section of the 1937 District of Columbia Appropriation Act, approved June 23, 1936 (Public, No. 762, 74th Cong.), contains the following provision:

> Not to exceed $50,000 shall be available for expenditure, under the direction of the President, for making an independent study of the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia and enabling him to report to Congress at the beginning of the next regular session, what, in his judgment, is a fair and equitable amount to be paid by the United States as an annual contribution toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia; such sum shall be available for personal services without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and for such other expenditures as may be necessary in connection with such study.

Pursuant to the above, I appointed a director and an advisory committee of three members to conduct an independent study of the various elements and conditions affecting the fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia.

The report contains detailed findings and recommendations with the supporting data and information collected from the Federal and District Governments in Washington and from 17 comparable American cities and the capital cities of 21 foreign countries.

The application of the basic principles and recommendations as outlined and detailed in the report is reflected in the following three-point formula, which I recommend be carefully considered by the Congress with a view to enacting such legislation at this session as may be necessary to establish equitable fiscal relationships between the two governments.

I. Intergovernmental contractual services: Contractual arrangements shall be established for the reimbursement of the cost of specific intergovernmental services supplied either government by the other. Appropriations therefor shall be included in the respective annual departmental budgets.

II. Capital outlays of joint interest: The National Capital Planning Commission (proposed in the report) shall determine the extent of the respective Federal and District interests in capital outlays and improvements to be included in the District budget.

III. Per-capita governmental costs: Pending the grant of broader powers of local control over purely local affairs, the excess of the District governmental costs per capita over the average of those in comparable cities shall be assumed by the Federal Government: Provided, however, That such excess District governmental costs shall be assumed only after allowance has been made for reimbursements due to unusual costs occasioned by congressional enactments.

I also recommend that, concurrently with enactment of any legislation which carries into effect the provisions of this continuing formula, the substantive law providing for annual Federal contributions of a fixed percentage of District appropriations be repealed and that the system of annual Federal lump-sum contributions be abandoned.

The application of this formula to the 1938 Budget estimates would provide for a net reimbursement by the Federal Government to the District of Columbia of $2,533,537, made up as follows:

I. Intergovernmental contractual services	$1,996,407
II. Capital outlays	536,950
III. Excess per capita District of Columbia governmental costs
Total	2,533,357

After the application of the formula there will still be a deficit in the general-revenue account of the District of Columbia of about $9,800,000, which will make it necessary, of course, to provide additional revenue. Sources of additional revenue are indicated in the report.

FISCAL RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

To the Congress of the United States:

Pursuant to the provisions in the 1937 District of Columbia Appropriation Act approved June 23, 1936 (Public, No. 762, 74th Cong.), I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress the following report on "Fiscal relations between the United States and the District of Columbia."

The major recommendations in this report are outlined in my 1938 Budget message as transmitted to you on this date. I have considered these findings and recommendations in collaboration with the advisory committee and the director of the study and I earnestly commend these to your close consideration at this session of Congress. I urge early enactment of the necessary legislative measures to assure a continuing equitable determination of fiscal relations between the two governments.

Special attention is invited to sections 10 and 13 which show that while the extent of local governmental services in the District of Columbia is substantially equal to that in 17 comparable cities, both the property tax and the total tax load in the District of Columbia are lower than in any of these cities.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 8, 1937.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

Mr. MOTT appeared in the Well of the House and took the oath of office.

BATTLE OF NEW ORLEANS

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, this being the one hundred and twenty-second anniversary of the Battle of New Orleans, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, it would not be properly reminiscent to permit this day elapse without making mention of the memorable Battle of New Orleans. Mr. Speaker, this day represents the one hundred and twenty-second anniversary of that great keystone battle, which was fought victoriously by Gen. Andrew Jackson and his comparative handful of volunteers from Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana on January 8, 1815. Much has been said of this battle in the past and much should be said in the future, but today I am content to limit my remarks to a few minutes just to have observation made. At a later time I will renew my efforts to have a great national park established on the plains of Chalmette and the actual battlegrounds adjacent thereto in the parish of St. Bernard, near the great city of New Orleans, La. What we have there now is simply a monument and some acreage under the National Park Service of the Interior and a national cemetery under the War Department. What should be done to perpetually commemorate this outstanding accomplishment and event is for our great National Government to establish a national military park there, such as was advocated in the last session of Congress and which passed this House. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article on the Ohio River, its future as a water-supply source, by H. W. Streeter, sanitary engineer of the United States Public Health Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, to this request, but it seems to me at the beginning of Congress we ought to have a definite understanding as to whether we are going to have inserted in the RECORD magazine articles prepared by experts. I think that is a question for the majority to decide, and it might be well to have it decided at the outset.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNELL of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of a letter written to Andrew Jackson by his mother.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by me in Washington, D. C., on December 10 explanatory of a measure I have introduced in this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, on Monday there will be no business unless some Member has leave to address the House. On Tuesday there is a special order for the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] to address the House for 1 hour.

On Wednesday there will be nothing unless the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] may be able to report his independent offices appropriation bill, and I now ask the gentleman from Virginia about the prospect of his doing so.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, replying to the gentleman from Texas, the subcommittee began informal hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill on the 1st of December. Those hearings are just about completed. The bill could be made ready except for the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] thought it best not to mark up the bill until the new members on the subcommittee were appointed. I can have the bill ready in 2 or 3 days, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] wishes it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. As I understood the gentleman's statement, there will be no regular business on the program on Monday except one speech by unanimous consent.

Mr. RAYBURN. There is nothing on Monday except the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] has been granted 5 minutes in which to address the House. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] has been granted 1 hour as a special order on Tuesday.

Mr. SNELL. Otherwise there will be no special business on Monday or Tuesday?

Mr. RAYBURN. No legislation.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, January 11, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 11, 1937

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God, who by the leading of a star didst manifest Thy blessed Son to the gentiles, and with celestial melody didst calm the fears of simple shepherds in the fields of Bethlehem, speak to all humble and inquiring spirits with the unsyllabled voice of Thy love, and establish the realm of true brotherhood on earth.

In our spiritual family, help us all to share each other's burdens; and as we greet the new day's wealth of opportunity for serving Thee, temper our thoughts with sympathy for those who, by reason of illness or sorrow's chastening breath, are absent from our midst. Deal tenderly with them, gracious Father; comfort and strengthen them with Thine indwelling; and bring us all at last to those hills of peace in Thy eternal kingdom. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, appeared in his seat today.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Whereas the present public health and safety of the State of Nebraska and of numerous counties and other governmental subdivisions therein are being imperiled by the existing and threatened deprivations of a considerable number of their inhabitants of the necessities of life owing to destructive droughts, which have blighted large areas of said State during the past 5 years; and

Whereas the duty of providing aid for those citizens of the State of Nebraska in need or unemployed either because of lack of employment or because of drought conditions in rural areas over which our citizens have no control is primarily an obligation of the State of Nebraska and the several counties therein; and

Whereas notwithstanding the primary responsibility of the State and the counties, as aforesaid, to alleviate distress caused by drought, it is a fact that the funds of the agencies of the State of Nebraska and its local subdivisions are now exhausted for relief needs under maximum levies, due in many instances to uncollected taxes in the agricultural regions of the State of Nebraska; and

Whereas it is the sense of this legislature that the impoverished condition of many of our citizens, due to the destructive drought, has become such a matter of public concern that the same ought to be alleviated by necessary increases in W. P. A. allotments of Federal funds forthwith: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Nebraska in fifty-second regular session assembled—

1. That this legislature respectfully petitions and memorializes the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States forthwith to provide necessary increases in W. P. A. allotments of Federal funds for the use and benefit of the State of Nebraska.

2. That the clerk of this legislature be directed forthwith to forward copies of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States as presiding officer of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to the United States Senators and Congressmen representing the State of Nebraska in the Congress, to the end that our Representatives in Washington may be promptly advised as to the distress which now imperils the health and safety of Nebraska citizens.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Workers' Alliance of California, Local No. 1, of Redwood City, Calif., praying for the making of continuing appropriations for Works Progress Administration projects, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the council of the city of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, favoring the making of continuing appropriations for Works Progress Administration projects, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Columbus, Ohio, by the house of delegates of the American Bar Association, favoring the placing of all positions in the Federal administrative services, with certain exceptions, under the civil service, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the Northern Coal Co., of Detroit, Mich., praying that certain limitations be incorporated in any coal-price-fixing legislation which may be enacted, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ARGENTINE SANITARY CONVENTION—MEMORIALS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire this morning briefly to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the livestock interests of the Nation are unanimously opposed to Senate ratification of the Argentine Sanitary Convention, now in the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

At the conclusion of a very brief statement of my own opposition to ratification of this convention, which would lower the bars wisely set up to protect the livestock industry and the consumers of this country against the dangerous foot-and-mouth disease, I will place in the RECORD resolutions and declarations against ratification from—

The American Farm Bureau Federation.

The National Grange.

The American National Livestock Association.

The National Livestock Marketing Association.

The United States Livestock Association.

These organizations represent an accurate cross section of American agriculture, and particularly of the livestock industry of the United States; and I wish to say that they express my own views in this matter. I am opposed to letting down the bars to the importation of livestock and meat products from any of the twoscore or so nations against which we have found it necessary to impose quarantine restrictions for protection against foot-and-mouth disease.

In taking this position I am standing for the protection of both the consumers and the producers of livestock. We have had a few examples in the past of what damage the foot-and-mouth disease does when it gets a foothold.

The immediate blow falls upon the livestock industry. Losses run into the millions in States, into the tens of millions for the livestock producers.

This blow to the prosperity of the livestock producers is followed by sharp rises in meat prices to the consumers, who are penalized millions upon millions of dollars in increased meat prices due to the shortage of meats that follows destruction of livestock herds infected with the foot-and-mouth disease.

It is my contention that the Senate has no right to imperil the interests of American livestock producers and gamble with the future beef supply of the American consumers by ratifying such a convention as that proposed in the convention now in the hands of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I hope the committee will refuse to report the convention to the Senate. That is all I have to say on this matter at the present time. I ask that the resolutions and statement which I send to the desk be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolutions and statement were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the house of voting delegates at the Eighteenth Annual Convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation, December 11, 1936, in Pasadena, Calif.:

8. LIVESTOCK

Livestock marketing practices differ in various parts of the country. Wherever possible livestock marketing methods should give the producers of livestock true values of the stock sold. Competition among buyers of livestock must be maintained and safeguarded. To accomplish these objectives, the Packers and Stockyards Act should be amended as follows:

To give access to the books and records of meat packers and stockyard operators by the Secretary of Agriculture for the purpose of gathering information relative to different types of livestock marketing in various parts of the country.

And that at the same time when the Packers and Stockyards Act shall be so amended further amendment should be had that would require adequate bonds upon all buyers and selling agencies of livestock both on and off the public markets where purchases are made for slaughter purposes and wherein the movement is of an interstate character.

It would further appear that the proceedings under the Packers and Stockyards Act that interested parties and associations of producers should be permitted to appear in such proceedings by intervention when matters are pending pertaining to market agencies or stockyard companies; that in matters before the Department under the act affecting proposed increases in rates and charges that the Secretary of Agriculture have the right to suspend the application of such rates and charges to a period not exceeding 180 days; and, further, that in matters involving changes in rates or charges that the proponent, whether it be the Government or a private agency, have placed upon it the burden of proving the reasonableness of such proposed changes.

We favor strengthening rather than weakening Federal quarantine regulations against foot-and-mouth disease. Accordingly, we oppose the proposed sanitary convention with the Argentine and commend the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations for its refusal to report this document to the Senate.

We believe that Federal laws and regulations with respect to all sanitary quarantines relating to agricultural products be strengthened to fully protect American producers and consumers.

We commend the program for the control of bovine tuberculosis which has been carried on in the past 3 years by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration and the Bureau of Animal Industry of the United States Department of Agriculture. Under this program the long struggle against bovine tuberculosis has been accelerated but not completed. Substantial progress has been made in the elimination of animals infected with Bang's disease and bovine mastitis. We urge that Congress appropriate sufficient funds to continue this program on a voluntary basis.

Resolution adopted by the National Grange in annual convention at Columbus, Ohio, November 11 to 19, 1936:

ARGENTINE SANITARY PACT

Since American agriculture in the past has suffered heavy losses from foot-and-mouth disease brought in from other countries, we are opposed to the ratification of the pending convention or treaty with the Argentina. Approval of the treaty would open our markets to imports of animal products from zones or areas in the Argentine that are supposed to be free from foot-and-mouth disease, although it is prevalent in other parts of the country. This would expose our flocks and herds to the danger of infection.

Resolution unanimously adopted at the semiannual meeting in Chicago of the board of directors of the National Livestock Marketing Association in December:

ARGENTINE SANITARY CONVENTION

Whereas, through vigilant and heroic efforts against the scourge of infectious and contagious diseases among animals, the United States has been kept free from a serious condition that might have developed without such effort; and

Whereas, through serious attention and prompt action, whenever foot-and-mouth disease has occurred within the United States it has been immediately controlled and this country has been saved from situations which exist throughout other nations, of taking foot-and-mouth disease as a regular occurrence; and

Whereas most of these outbreaks have been where they could be controlled, but an outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease which would contaminate domestic and wild animals on the open plains, the deserts, and mountain regions of the West would spread infection and be uncontrollable, with the probable effect of almost annihilating both domestic and wild animals, thus destroying the meat-food supply of our Nation and one of our major industries: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the directors of National Live Stock Marketing Association, in meeting assembled this 2d day of December 1936, do hereby vigorously protest any modification of any regulation which, now prevents or will hereafter prevent the importation of livestock or meat from any country or section thereof that has foot-and-mouth disease within its borders; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary communicate with the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, and all Members of the Senate, requesting that the Argentine Sanitary Convention be not approved.

Resolution adopted by the American National Livestock Association opposing the Argentine sanitary convention:

ARGENTINE SANITARY CONVENTION

Whereas the Argentine sanitary convention, now pending before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, would permit the importation of livestock products from zones purported to be free from rinderpest or foot-and-mouth disease; and

Whereas under the present provisions of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act importation of such products is prohibited from countries where these diseases exist; and

Whereas under this measure of strict exclusion our country is now free from the ravages of these dreaded diseases: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we vigorously oppose the ratification of the proposed Argentine sanitary agreement, and demand the retention of the present embargo against importation of livestock or its products from countries where either rinderpest or foot-and-mouth disease exists.

From statement by D. M. Hildebrand, president of the United States Livestock Association, to members of his association:

Without question, if the Argentine sanitary convention is approved, it will jeopardize the interests of every livestock producer in the United States.

We cannot afford to subject our livestock to the danger of foot-and-mouth disease. Furthermore, it is unfair to our producers to have to compete with cattle raised primarily on grass, in a country that is not subjected to the many hazards which surround livestock producers both in the range and Corn Belt areas of the United States.

There is no question in my mind but what the Argentine sanitary convention would bring disaster and failure to the livestock industry throughout the United States if permitted to pass. It will take the combined efforts of all interests to prevent approval of this measure, and I want to urge you at this time to contact your representatives in Washington to not only use their votes but their influence to defeat the proposal. I believe this to be one of the most important problems confronting the livestock industry for the year 1937.

It is my New Year's wish to you all that 1937 will bring about closer harmony and cooperation between all phases of the livestock industry. I trust the new year will bring prosperity to every livestock producer throughout the United States.

D. M. HILDEBRAND,
President, United States Livestock Association.

ANNIVERSARY OF BIRTH OF ETHAN ALLEN

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a proclamation issued by the Governor of the State of Vermont, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the proclamation.

The proclamation was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

State of Vermont—Charles M. Smith, Governor

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas General Ethan Allen was born on the 10th day of January 1737; and

Whereas the Ethan Allen Bicentennial Commission, appointed by me in accordance with the provisions of a joint resolution of the general assembly, has designated the week commencing on the 10th day of January 1937 as a week to be set apart for the observance of the two hundredth anniversary of his birth: Now, therefore, I, Charles M. Smith, Governor, do hereby call upon the people of the State of Vermont to commemorate during the aforesaid week the life and the deeds of Ethan Allen, chieftain of the Green Mountain Boys, victor at Ticonderoga in the first offensive action of the American Revolution, who, after enduring the rigors of British captivity for 2 years, returned to aid in the preservation of the young Republic of Vermont, wielding his pen and his sword with courage and daring, unawed by threats, undaunted by failure, never shaken in allegiance to the Vermont that he loved, the Vermont which, in turn, has, in his own day and in all the succeeding generations, placed him in the forefront of those most meriting respect and honor.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at Montpelier, this 26th day of December, A. D. 1936, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and sixty-first.

CHARLES M. SMITH, Governor.

By the Governor:
[SEAL]

ELEANOR DANA,
Secretary of Civil and Military Affairs.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, Ethan Allen served the cause of liberty at a time when his extraordinary physical and mental vigor, his versatility, his reckless daring, and his spectacular leadership were precisely what were needed.

In the successful revolution of the New Hampshire grantees, which preceded the American Revolution, he was the colonel commandant of the Green Mountain Boys, a military organization of woodsmen which provided the sanction for the government by conventions under which the Green Mountain people were then living.

During this period he served in many other capacities than that of a military leader. At a time when it was necessary for the settlers of the New Hampshire Grants to have a representative in the royal court at Albany to meet and defend actions of ejectment, Ethan Allen appeared there in that capacity and managed the defenses. Descriptive of his impetuous nature and his extraordinary manner of expressing it is the fact that when the judgment of the royal court excluded from evidence the deeds of title of the original New Hampshire grantees Ethan shook his great fist at the attorney general and said to him, "The gods of the hills are not the gods of the valleys." Being asked by the attorney general what he meant by that remark, he said, "Come over to Bennington Hill and it will all be made manifest unto you."

When the sheriffs and their aides came to execute the writs of possession granted by the royal court, they were met by Ethan and his Green Mountain boys and taken into the wilderness and there stripped, and what was called "the beech seal" was applied to their backs in order that they might always bear with them the evidence of the authority of the deeds of the original New Hampshire grants.

The repulsion of the King's troops from Concord and Lexington by farmers armed with hunting muskets electrified Ethan Allen's passion for liberty and excited the execution of a bold stroke in the general cause which for some time had been contemplated by him for another cause—the capture of Ticonderoga. This important fortress was captured by surprise and without bloodshed with a force recruited from Connecticut, Massachusetts, and the Green Mountains. Ethan Allen, when asked by what authority he demanded surrender, shouted, "In the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress."

Notwithstanding the lack of previous warrant from such headquarters, the Continental Congress accepted the benefit of this capture and resolved to employ the Green Mountain boys in the war under officers of their own choosing.

They had refused and continued to refuse to be articulated with Continental troops. They were conducting a great contest for the independence of their own State. The reason for refusing to be articulated with Continental troops was because of the possible adverse effect on the independence of the State which they were creating.

Then followed a dark period in Ethan's impetuous career. He was not elected to any office in the regiment. He had advocated an early attack on Canada, which was not approved. When Congress finally decided to make the northern campaign Ethan Allen was permitted by General Schuyler to accompany the Army without commission. In September 1775, while the Army was encamped before St. Johns, Ethan was sent on a reconnaissance northward. As he proceeded toward the St. Lawrence he recruited Canadian volunteers and arranged to attack Montreal from the north simultaneously with an attack to be led by John Brown from the south. While maneuvering to get some signal from Brown—which he never did get—Ethan's force was captured by the British. For more than a month Ethan was imprisoned in the lowest hold of a ship of war, pinioned with handcuffs, heavy leg irons, and an 8-foot bar, so that he must constantly lie on his back. Later he was removed to Falmouth and imprisoned in Pendennis Castle.

I may say in passing that one of the reasons why Vermont loves the Irish so well is that throughout Ethan's imprisonment the Irish people, who were great lovers of liberty and appreciated Ethan's achievement and who were intrigued by his speeches made while in prison there, afforded him clothing and food so that he was kept alive to be paroled when the time came to dispose of him, which question of disposal troubled the British greatly.

During his imprisonment and parole, which ended in May 1778, the constitution of Vermont had been adopted and the second phase of the revolution of the New Hampshire grantees had begun with the declaration of independence of Vermont and the refusal of Congress to recognize the new State.

Ethan's return to the Green Mountains, almost 3 years after his rebuff at the hands of those he described as "the old farmers on the New Hampshire Grants who do not incline to go to war", came at an opportune time. The State was surrounded by enemies bent upon tearing her to pieces and appropriating the pieces. Vermont urgently needed this strong man of such fortitude and firmness that misfortune, captivity, and sufferings only increased his enthusiastic zeal.

During the 13 years which ended with the recognition and admission of Vermont into the Union in 1791, Ethan Allen was the personification of the spirit of the mountains. Again he commanded the Green Mountain boys—a more colorful leader than before. Again he was the orator whose untempered use of vehement expressions, barbarisms, scriptural phrases, magic wit, and animated, forceful style captured the mob and transformed its anger into amusement or gave it effective direction.

Now he acted as prosecuting attorney or sat in council with assemblymen. His refusal to take the religious test oath disqualified him to be assemblyman, but his attendance and service were invited, and he was even appointed to committees and commissions.

I call attention in passing to the fact that his constituents knew his proclivity to dispute and argue on religious matters. His profanity and scoffing were his declaration of emancipation from Puritanism, hell fire, predestination, infant damnation, and hopeless theology. But his writings, which contain many well-considered acknowledgments of the propitious agency of Deity in connection with the history of the Revolution and of the development of the State, lead me to consider that he was religious and believed in God, as evidenced through the revelations of nature and by the Bible, with which he was familiar.

Ethan conceived the idea of banishment of Tories and confiscation of their property to finance the Revolution, and acted as one of the commissioners to try persons charged with conduct inimical, treacherous, or treasonable.

He is pictured with a small clearing in the wilderness for his courtroom, and some great pine tree for his judgment seat, condemning guilty Yorkers and Tories alike as "atrocious villians."

The wreath of remembrance laid on his statue in Statuary Hall by the Vermont delegation in Congress today is of pine, symbolical of the simplicity and the grandeur of his temple of justice.

Ethan Allen, with other leaders, had been condemned to death ex parte and in absentia by the Provincial Congress of New York in 1774; and Ethan now refreshed and invigorated his "woods people" by a bombastic, logical, and humorous pamphlet to counteract a proclamation by the royal Governor of New York offering to confirm the title of all land actually settled by New Hampshire grantees provided Vermont would acknowledge New York's jurisdiction. He was a prolific writer and his books, pamphlets, and newspaper articles aroused activity at home and sympathetic interest abroad.

Vermont, being opposed by the Continental Congress, harried on the north by one-third of the British Army in North America, and claimed in part or in whole by the States which bounded her, adopted a policy of aggression which included annexation of certain towns easterly of the Connecticut River and westerly to the Hudson River, and a negotiation with Lord Haldimand which kept the British troops north of the border for 3 years, until Cornwallis' surrender.

In these activities Ethan acted as an emissary to the Continental Congress at Philadelphia, as a diplomat steering a dangerous course among the rocks and shoals of foreign relations, and as a lobbyist with Governor and council and assembly at home. In his dramatic career Ethan never accomplished more for the common cause of liberty or for the independence of Vermont than he did by the strategy, dash, and brilliancy of his maneuvers as public relations counsel in these bold plays.

In 1779 Ethan was elected brigadier general of the Vermont Militia—the Green Mountain Boys. As such, he rode the hills and valleys, assisting the civil organization to apprehend and bring to trial Yorkers and other trespassers, "settling discontent among the people," and concocting pamphlets for the outside world, illustrative of which was a convincing one edited by him and Jonas Fay bearing the title, A Concise Refutation of the Claims of New Hampshire and Massachusetts Bay to the Territory of Vermont; with Occasional Remarks on the Long Disputed Claim of New York to the Same, Written by Ethan Allen and Jonas Fay, Esqs., and Published by the Order of the Governor and Council of Vermont.

In 1781 it transpired that the secret negotiations with the British were known outside the Committee of Safety, whereupon General Allen sent two British communications to the President of Congress by letter showing that Vermont had protected the northern frontier while her troops were serving the Continental cause elsewhere, although Congress claimed "an exclusive right of arbitrating on the existence of Vermont as a separate government", and apparently intended to partition her among the surrounding States, and said:

> I do not hesitate to say I am fully grounded in opinion that Vermont has an indubitable right to agree on terms of cessation of hostilities with Great Britain, provided the United States persist in rejecting her application for a union with them; for Vermont, of all people, would be the most miserable were she obliged to defend the independence of united claiming States, and they, at the same time, at full liberty to overturn and ruin the independence of Vermont. I am persuaded when Congress considers the circumstances of this State they will be more surprised that I have transmitted them the enclosed letters than that I have kept them in custody so long, for I am [as] resolutely determined to defend the independence of Vermont as Congress are that of the United States, and, rather than fail will retire with hardy Green Mountain Boys into the desolate caverns of the mountains and wage war with human nature at large.

Ethan Allen never knew the State which he so effectively helped to establish as anything other than a Revolutionary territory and an independent republic, governing its own people, maintaining a perfect defense against all aggressors, conducting its own international relations, coining its own money, naturalizing citizens, and guaranteeing in its earliest constitution two novel principles—freedom from human slavery and manhood suffrage not dependent on property. He died February 17, 1789, 2 years before the State was admitted into the Union.

John Pell, Ethan Allen's ablest biographer, to whom we are indebted, affords the phrase which characterizes his life: "He was the slave of freedom."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 11, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We have heard Thy voice, our Father, and again we come to Thee. Thou who art "The Great I Am", who forgives, redeems, and satisfies, hear us as we pause these sacred moments. Thou who art the source of our highest longings and aspirations, kindle a flame in our hearts that shall glow with the coming years. Enable us to be spiritual architects of our souls, building on an abiding foundation. We pray that their temples may arise to the music of eternity without the sound of a hammer nor the noise of a trowel. Wherever there is hate, oppression, and injustice, O Lord, Thy righteous will be done. Lead us to attain unto the wisdom of the wise by keeping us in touch with this throbbing human world. In thoughts and in practices may we go on and on, wondering at the fullness of divine love. In our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 8, 1937, was read and approved.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION (H. DOC. NO. 99)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered printed:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 11, 1937.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

SIR: In my Budget message of January 5, 1937, I indicated my intention of requesting that Congress provide an appropriation of $790,000,000 for the purpose of carrying the Works Progress Administration and related programs from February 1 to June 30, 1937.

In general, the problem of relief has diminished with the extensive reemployment and recovery which has occurred in nearly all lines of business and industrial activity. At the beginning of the present winter at least 6,000,000 more workers were employed in nonagricultural jobs than in March 1933, and of this number more than 1,000,000 have found jobs with private industry during the past year.

In my message of March 18, 1936, I stated:

The ultimate cost of the Federal works program will thus be determined by private enterprise. Federal assistance which arose as a result of industrial disemployment can be terminated if industry itself removes the underlying conditions. Should industry cooperatively achieve the goal of reemployment, the appropriation of $1,500,000,000, together with the unexpended balances of previous appropriations, will suffice to carry the Federal works program through the fiscal year 1937. Only if industry fails to reduce substantially the number of those now out of work will another appropriation and further plans and policies be necessary.

Many private enterprises have cooperated and I hope that there will be further sustained efforts on the part of private employers. Great assistance can be given to the Government if all private employers in every part of the country will seek, insofar as they reasonably can, to obtain additional workers from the relief rolls. In this connection it is worth noting that by far the larger part of those on the relief rolls fall into the category of unskilled workers.

As a result of the natural increase in our population, each year at least 400,000 new workers are seeking work, and this number of new jobs annually is necessary simply to prevent an increase in unemployment.

Certain other facts are worth noting. The tendency toward a longer workweek has had an extremely important effect on reemployment. Hours of work in manufacturing industries, as shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics index, averaged 33.3 hours per week in September 1934. This average has increased by 20 percent to more than 40 hours per week in October 1936.

While among most industries and most employers the maximum hours established under the National Recovery Act have not been greatly increased, it is worth noting that in some industries and among some employers the former maximum hours have been unreasonably increased. Every action of an employer along these lines obviously tends toward the stepping up of production without an equivalent stepping up of employment. It is not unfair to say that these employers who are working their employees unreasonably long hours are failing to cooperate with the Government and their fellow citizens in putting people back to work.

In March 1936 more than 3,400,000 employable persons were provided for by the works program, not including the Civilian Conservation Corps. At the present time, as a result of an exhaustive review of the needs of the families of workers on the works program, we have found that it will be necessary during the winter months to provide employment for at least 2,580,000 workers, of which number 250,000 will receive employment from funds appropriated in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935. This represents a net reduction of more than 800,000 since last March. Further reductions will be made in the spring and summer, at the time of seasonal increases in private employment.

An unforeseen factor in Federal expenditures for the relief of destitution has been drought, which laid waste large area of the country and brought disaster to hundreds of thousands of farm families. During last summer and fall an emergency program was developed to provide employment for the most destitute of the stricken families. With the advent of winter about 250,000 of these families are being transferred from work projects to the Resettlement Administration, which will provide them with direct grants for subsistence through the winter and make other provisions to get them started on an independent basis when the planting season arrives.

Since the balance of the present appropriation of $1,425,000,000 for relief and work relief will be barely sufficient to finance this program through the month of January, I recommend that the Congress provide a supplemental appropriation of $790,000,000 for this purpose for the remainder of the fiscal year 1937.

We have promised that the men, women, and children of America who are destitute through no fault of their own shall not be neglected. Before the end of this fiscal year I shall make specific recommendations to the Congress, defining in detail my views relative to the continuing problem of unemployment relief and its administration in 1938.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech of my own which has been recorded for broadcasting in Alaska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

ETHAN ALLEN

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, under his hand and the great seal of the State, on the 26th day of December last, the following proclamation was issued by the Governor of the State of Vermont:

State of Vermont—Charles M. Smith, Governor

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas Gen. Ethan Allen was born on the 10th day of January 1737; and

Whereas the Ethan Allen Bicentennial Commission, appointed by me in accordance with the provisions of a joint resolution of the general assembly, has designated the week commencing on the 10th day of January 1937 as a week to be set apart for the observance of the two hundredth anniversary of his birth: Now, therefore,

I, Charles M. Smith, Governor, do hereby call upon the people of the State of Vermont to commemorate, during the aforesaid week, the life and the deeds of Ethan Allen, chieftain of the Green Mountain Boys, victor at Ticonderoga in the first offensive action of the American Revolution, who, after enduring the rigors of British captivity for 2 years, returned to aid in the preservation of the young Republic of Vermont, wielding his pen and his sword with courage and daring, unawed by threats, undaunted by failure, never shaken in allegiance to the Vermont that he loved, the Vermont which, in turn, has, in his own day and in all the succeeding generations, placed him in the forefront of those most meriting respect and honor.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the State, at Montpelier, this 26th day of December, A. D. 1936, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and sixty-first.

CHARLES M. SMITH, Governor.

By the Governor:

[SEAL]

ELEANOR DANA,
Secretary of Civil and Military Affairs.

It is eminently fitting, Mr. Speaker, that the Congress of the United States should take notice of this proclamation and of the occasion which is sought to be observed.

The leader in thought and action of that group which with him fought for and maintained the liberties of the people of Vermont as an independent republic for 14 years may have said of him that within his territorial limitations and circumscribed environment no man contributed more toward the establishment of the independence of our country than did this man Ethan Allen. His reckless courage and daring, bold defiance of conventions, natural literary and military genius and ability, and real statesmanship made him and marked him for all time as an outstanding hero of Revolutionary times and days.

He was the idol of the intrepid Green Mountain Boys whom he led and served and of all those who have come after them. Impetuous in his decisions, inexhaustible in his energy, brave as a lion, familiar with danger, undaunted of courage, impatient of restraint, the years only serve to testify to the respect and appreciation of his countrymen for a man of such remarkable natural endowments and attainments as were his.

He was the unyielding advocate of the rights of man and universal liberty, unconditional and without reserve, and the champion of and fearless fighter for the cause of the humble citizen, as he contended for the rights of individual property and the equal dispensation of justice.

An enemy to oppression, he was a stranger to fear. Honest in his conclusions, however erroneous might have been the premises from which they were deduced, his spirit never faltered; he never quailed beneath the sneer of the enemy, no matter how powerful or numerous, nor was he awed by the threats of insolent authority.

Ethan Allen fought to stand and hold his ground and yielded it only inch by inch, if and when inadequately supported or when stripped or deprived of weapons with which to meet his adversary.

He possessed the physical courage which despises all danger and that moral courage which discounts all opinions. One is necessary for the camp and the other for the council, and both are absolutely essential and necessarily found in such men whom we are pleased to honor and the ages call great.

Ethan Allen needs no monument, for, as has been so well said, only those deserve a monument who do not need one; he raised himself a monument in the minds and memories of men. He needs no marble statue; no granite mausoleum or bronze plaque to mark his final resting place or to perpetuate his memory.

"Deeds, not stones, are the true monuments of the great." Ethan Allen erected to himself a monument more lasting than brass, more sublime than the pyramids, which neither the storms of the centuries that waste nor of the years which succeed each other innumerably with their everlasting flight of the seasons, shall be able to demolish.

"The very pyramids have forgotten their builders"; but so long as courage and daring, love of liberty, justice, and country shall last, the name of Ethan Allen will be held in the memories of and be venerated by his appreciative countrymen.

"Brave deeds", said Napoleon, "are the monuments of brave men." [Applause.]

RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me rather fitting at the moment, after listening to the President's message of this morning, to read an interesting letter I received very recently:

AMERICAN WRITERS UNION, LOCAL NO. 3,
Boston, Mass., January 7, 1937.

HON. CHARLES L. GIFFORD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: You have received during the past week letters from several organizations of professional W. P. A. workers in Massachusetts requesting your support for a relief appropriation of $1,250,000 for the remainder of the fiscal year.

You were notified at the same time that these organizations intend to lead a delegation of hundreds of Massachusetts W. P. A. workers to Washington in order to impress Congress with the needs of the unemployed.

The cost of transporting these workers is great, and the treasuries of W. P. A. unions are small. We have found it necessary, therefore, to appeal to all public-spirited men and women for contributions toward the expenses of the delegation. As a Representative of Massachusetts in the highest legislative body in the land, you are urged to support the unemployed not only with your vote but also with a donation of at least $10.

A book of stamps is enclosed for that purpose. Please make checks payable to Arthur Buckley, treasurer.

Respectfully yours,

WELDON CAIE,
Chairman, Organizing Committee, White Collar and Professional Project Workers Alliance.

American Writers Union, Local No. 3.
Artists Union of Massachusetts.
American Federation of Government Employees, Lodge 294.
Federation of Architects, Engineers, Chemists, and Technicians.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many others of the Massachusetts delegation may have received a similar appeal, but if any have we need your advice in the matter. Shall we encourage a march on Washington? I for one feel rather surprised that citizens from organizations in my State of Massachusetts should consider doing such a thing. On the other hand, artists, writers, architects, and those following cultural occupations will probably not be absorbed in industry, and I see behind this movement an indication that they will not in the future expect to depend upon private philanthropy and private philanthropists to further their cultural ambitions.

I regard this as a broad hint that this, like the C. C. C. perhaps, ought to be regarded as a permanent fixture of our Government, supported by Federal appropriations.

I invite you of other delegations who have not received such letters to advise with me as to my attitude regarding this matter. [Applause.]

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that there will be a meeting of the Republican members of the Committee on Committees this afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, in the hearing room of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, New House Office Building.

QUARTERING OF TROOPS PARTICIPATING IN INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Joint Resolution 17, to provide for the quartering, in certain public buildings in the District of Columbia, of troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 17

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to allocate such space in any public building under his care and supervision as he deems necessary for the purposes of quartering troops participating in the inaugural ceremonies to be held on January 20, 1937, but such use shall not continue after January 22, 1937. Authority granted by this resolution may be exercised notwithstanding the provisions of the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation Act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, approved April 28, 1902, prohibiting the use of public buildings in connection with inaugural ceremonies.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the usual resolution for taking care of troops participating in inaugural ceremonies that is passed at this time?

Mr. RAYBURN. That is my understanding.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXEMPTION OF TAX ON ADMISSION TICKETS SOLD BY COMMITTEE ON INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate Joint Resolution 18, to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 18

Resolved, etc., That all amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies of the Inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937, said committee to be appointed with the approval of the President-elect, shall be exempt from the tax on admissions imposed by section 500 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, all the net proceeds from the sale of said tickets to be donated by the said committee to charity.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] to explain the resolution?

Mr. RAYBURN. May I say this resolution has just come over from the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have an understanding about this, so that we may know something about the resolution before passing it. In the first place, I suppose the erection of the seats along the avenues, and so forth, is a private enterprise.

Mr. DOUGHTON. That is my understanding, although I have no official information in regard to the matter.

Mr. SNELL. If this is a private enterprise, why should we omit the collection of the regular tax, which applies on admission tickets to all other games in the United States? The tickets sold for a football game in my town, or any other game, require the payment of an admission tax. Why should we remit this tax at the present time? I think we should have some definite understanding about this before it is passed.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman has the privilege of objecting.

Mr. SNELL. I think we should know something more about it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution, as I understand it, and the same as passed in 1933.

Mr. SNELL. It is the same resolution?

Mr. RAYBURN. It is in the exact language of the resolution passed in 1933.

Mr. SNELL. I should like to have an explanation of the situation. I had forgotten we did the same thing in 1933.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield? I should like to make this statement. A resolution is now being brought in here which provides for exemption of taxes on tickets sold for seats to view the inaugural parade. I personally dislike to object in this particular instance because someone may think, coming from me, it is political.

May I say at this time I am opposed to tax-exempt securities. I think the time has arrived when tax-exempt securities should be eliminated by the Federal Government as well as the various State governments.

Let us look at the President's report and Budget as presented here on Friday. The President states therein that we are in the red to the extent of $35,020,000,000. Read and analyze that report. Then take the reports of Mr. Morgenthau, of the Treasury Department, and analyze those reports from day to day. It will be noted that the Government is going in the red from ten to twenty-five million dollars a day on the average.

There is something ahead that we are all going to rue. We are passing on to our children something that cannot be coped with by them, and we are unable to cope with it now.

If we are going to take upon ourselves the responsibility of financing the Government, I believe every Member of Congress should at the beginning of this session come to a realization that we must stop the issuance of all of these tax-exempt securities. We should stop issuing them and do it now.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman is talking about tax-exempt securities. Would he call this a tax-exempt security?

Mr. RICH. Yes; I would. I have said before, and I say again, if the membership of this House is sincere in its efforts to rule this Government efficiently it should recognize this fact now. The President's message has been read to us. He states that the Budget will be balanced; but this Congress is responsible for balancing the Budget. He states that the business interests of this country should give him the cooperation that he wants. However, you are putting great pressure on the business interests of this country, and you will continue to do so. If you follow through with this idea you are going to crush business. The tax structure is becoming so narrow you are going to crush all of those who are able to pay taxes. Then you will have a wreck of things. Any person who can pay $3 to $10 for a ticket to the grandstand can also afford to pay the admission tax just the same as any person going to the theater. What is the difference?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the joint resolution has to do with taxes, I withdraw it from present consideration by the House.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. HILL of Washington, for 5 days, on account of official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 46 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 12, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1937

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who travelest on the wings of the morning, who of Thy gracious bounty hast bestowed upon us all the gift of sleep, that blessed barrier 'twixt day and day and mother of fresh thoughts and joyous health, we give Thee thanks for all the blessings of this life as again we bow before Thee at this altar dedicated to our country's high and holy destiny.

Help us now and always to give the reins of our life into Thy hands, Thou who dost keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee, for nothing can take Thee by surprise, nothing can outweary Thee.

Thus, as fellow laborers with Thee, may we move through the hours, breathing the atmosphere of love, seeking by kindness rather than by anxious striving to quicken and bless the lives of others, which is the mark of our high calling in Christ Jesus, our Lord. Amen.

PETITION OF WALLKILL VALLEY (N. Y.) DRAINAGE IMPROVEMENT ASSOCIATION

Mr. COPELAND. I present the petition of the Wallkill Valley Drainage Improvement Association, Orange County, N. Y., and ask that it be printed in the RECORD; and that, with the attached papers, it be referred to the Committee on Commerce for such action as the committee may deem wise.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

To the Flood Control Committee of the United States Senate:

Whereas the Government of the United States, through the agency of the Civilian Conservation Corps, under the direction of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, has undertaken and is now carrying on a major flood-control and drainage-improvement project along the upper Wallkill River, in the county of Orange, State of New York; and

Whereas the State of New York, through its water power and control commission, in furtherance of said project, has formed and is administering the Wallkill Valley Drainage Improvement District, in said county and State, and has issued bonds, payable by direct taxation against the residents of said district, to finance its share of the cost thereof; and

Whereas the said residents of said district have consented to and approved said bond issue and obligated themselves therefor, upon the understanding that said drainage-improvement project would be completed by the United States Government in its originally approved form; and

Whereas the Wallkill Valley Drainage Improvement Association, being the duly formed body politic organized under the conservation law of the State of New York to represent the residents of said district, is now informed that the Government is contemplating the termination of its work on said project in the near future without completing said project, and that the funds appropriated for said project are insufficient to enable the Army engineers to finish their work as originally planned and authorized, and that, among other portions, that section of said work known as the "main cut-off channel" in the locality south of Pellet's Island Mountain in particular will be left uncompleted; and

Whereas the public needs of the residents of said district require full completion of said project as planned and authorized; and

Whereas if said project be left incomplete, great harm and damage will be done to farm lands within the area of said district and the rights of its residents and taxpayers will be seriously impaired and jeopardized and great loss entailed to hundreds of residents of said county of Orange; and

Whereas if said project should be now abandoned in its present form and left incomplete, the taxpayers and farmers of said district will sustain greater damage than if the said project had never been begun; and

Whereas the officers and executive committee of said Wallkill Valley Drainage Improvement Association are convinced of the facts herein set forth by personal knowledge and through competent expert advice: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the said Wallkill Valley Drainage Improvement Association shall, and hereby does, petition the Government of the United States, through its proper agencies, to direct the completion of the said Wallkill River flood-control and drainage-improvement project in the form originally planned and contemplated, and to complete said river improvement in a proper, effective, scientific, and workmanlike manner within the area along said river from the boundary of the State of New Jersey on the south to the county highway at Phillipsburg on the north, in said county of Orange, and to approve and authorize the expenditure of so much additional money as may be necessary and required for said purposes, and also to approve and authorize the continued employment of the present, or increased, Civilian Conservation Corps personnel, under the supervision of the present efficient staff of Army engineers, for so long a time as may be required for the above purposes.

And your petitioners pray an early inquiry into the urgent needs herein set forth.

Dated, Florida, Orange County, N. Y., January 5, 1937.

Wallkill Valley Drainage Improvement Association, by Walter R. Stun (president), John J. Downey (secretary), Samuel Chison (treasurer), A. J. Bogdanski (first vice president), R. McCormick (second vice president), Anthony A. Lis (assistant secretary), Karl J. Fiske, F. J. Kurowski, Floyd Morgiewiz, Joseph Wisemen, Jr., John J. Nowoik, Leo Schribins, Joseph P. Kuega, M. Cutfus Lain, its executive committee.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM OF THE NATIONAL GRANGE

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I present, for reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the legislative program of the National Grange for 1937, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM OF THE NATIONAL GRANGE FOR 1937, ADOPTED AT ITS SEVENTIETH ANNUAL CONVENTION AT COLUMBUS, OHIO, NOVEMBER 11–19, 1936

1. Justice for agriculture: Agriculture asks for equality, rather than special privilege. It seeks economic justice, rather than subsidy. But until the equilibrium of our basic industry is restored, and until the farmer receives a more just proportion of the national income, some measure of governmental assistance will be needed.

Our goal should be the preservation and prosperity of the family-sized farm. It is contrary to sound public policy, and un-American as well, for the Government to encourage corporation or large-scale farming.

2. Soil Conservation Act: The welfare of this and succeeding generations calls for the wise conservation of our soil resources. We must preserve its fertility and prevent erosion. In broad outlines we approve of the program which has been launched in this connection. However, the preservation of democracy and of American ideals demands that there shall be no undue regimentation of the farmer. We favor the largest possible degree of farmer control in the administration of the Soil Conservation Act.

3. Control of monopoly: It is manifest that the blessings of political liberty cannot be fully enjoyed under a system which permits monopolies and monopolistic practices to rob the people of the fruits of their toil. We favor the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust law, with any clarifying and strengthening amendments that may be needed to enable us to cope with present-day conditions.

4. Reciprocal-trade agreements: If the Reciprocal Tariff Act is to be renewed, there should be a provision requiring that all trade agreements or treaties made thereunder be ratified by the United States Senate before becoming effective. Such treaties should not contain the unconditional most-favored-nation clause, under which policy we gain concessions from one nation while making concessions to all other nations producing and exporting any given commodity.

5. Tariff policy: Following is an outline of the tariff policy adopted by the National Grange:

(a) So long as the American protective policy is maintained, we favor such rates of import duty as will assure the American market for the American farmer to the extent that he is able to supply it.

(b) Since it is well understood that producers of surplus crops receive no direct tariff benefits, equality and justice demand that import duties on commodities which the farmer must buy should be fixed at fair and reasonable levels.

(c) As a measure of equality under our tariff system, we favor the continuance of the plan which dedicates 30 percent of the receipts from customs to the exportation, removal, or diversion of agricultural surpluses.

(d) We affirm that it is contrary to sound public policy to impose tariffs for the protection of such resources as cannot be renewed when they are once exhausted.

(e) In no case should tariff rates be granted that breed monopoly, enriching the few at the expense of the many, and which encourage inefficiency, rather than efficiency, in American industry.

(f) We reaffirm the long-established policy of the Grange in demanding "tariff for all or tariff for none."

6. Land utilization: Following is a concise outline of the Grange policy on land utilization:

(a) If, under prevailing conditions, new land is brought under cultivation at public expense, the Government should purchase and retire from agricultural production a much greater amount of submarginal land.

(b) Submarginal agricultural land should be utilized for pasture, timber production, recreational uses, game preserves, or other suitable purposes.

(c) We favor the restoration of the Bureau of Soils as a separate entity under the Department of Agriculture.

(d) We favor the transfer of the Land Utilization Division of the Resettlement Administration to the Department of Agriculture. It is in the national interest that there be retained in this Department the complete management of the national forests, the Soil Conservation Service, the Biological Survey, and other agencies directly related to agriculture. Nationally owned lands of primary value for timber production, water and soil conservation, and grazing, including lands administered under the Taylor Grazing Act, should be transferred to the Department of Agriculture.

7. The Federal Constitution: The Grange has an abiding faith in the excellence and fundamental soundness of the Constitution, which made and preserved us a nation. While we do not look upon the Constitution as sacred in the sense that it should never be changed, even in its minor details, we are firmly convinced that the checks and balances contained in it as between the legislative, executive, and judicial departments must be maintained. The Grange does not look with favor upon the proposal that the power of the Supreme Court to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress should be abridged or impaired. The right of free speech, a free press, and of public assemblage must be kept inviolate.

8. Centralization of government: The Grange deprecates the tendency toward overcentralization of government, which has been in progress in this country for many years. It is fatal to the cause of good government, besides adding enormously to the tax burden, to destroy the local sense of responsibility which causes the average citizen to scrutinize public expenditures.

We are opposed to any constitutional changes that would abridge the rights of the States to control their own affairs within proper limits or that would impair the legitimate rights of the people in the affairs of local self-government.

9. Farm tenancy: The Grange favors the adoption of a workable plan by the Government to encourage farm tenants to become home owners under proper conditions. We likewise favor the continuance of the present rural rehabilitation program.

10. Taxation: It should be clearly understood that colossal bond issues and the swelling proportions of the public debt mean the same thing as deferred taxation. Every effort should be made to balance the Federal Budget at the earliest practicable date, primarily by reducing expenditures. The Grange recommends:

(a) That the base of taxation be broadened, to the end that all persons be made tax conscious. Income-tax exemptions should be lowered and rates in the higher brackets should be raised.

(b) Income from all sources should be made taxable, including that from salaries paid by State and Federal Governments, together with interest on tax-exempt bonds.

(c) A portion of all revenues accruing from the Federal income tax should be returned to the States for the benefit of the public schools, with provision for State administration.

(d) Maintenance of inheritance, gift, and estate taxes.

(e) We oppose a general sales tax on the necessities of life, because it ignores the principle of ability to pay.

(f) We favor the appointment of a Federal commission to make a study of our whole system of taxation, Federal and State, with a view to securing a more just and equitable distribution of the burdens of government.

11. Rural credits: We commend the Farm Credit Administration for the excellent service it has rendered during the past several years. We recommend that the reduced interest rate on mortgages held by the Federal land banks be continued until normal conditions again prevail in agriculture.

Congress should restore to farmer borrowers the right to name the majority of the directors of the land banks, as was provided under the original Farm Loan Act.

Provision should be made for the appointment of the governor and four commissioners of the Farm Credit Administration for 5-year terms, so staggered that one term expires each year, and with not more than three members belonging to the same political party.

12. Monetary stabilization: The Grange stands for an honest dollar, a dollar that will be fair to debtor and creditor alike. We advocate an amendment to the Banking Act of 1935, under which Congress will give a mandate to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System to manage the currency in such a way as to restore the average price level obtaining between 1921 and 1929, and then to stabilize the purchasing power of the dollar at that point. Congress should exercise the authority conferred upon it by the Constitution "to coin money and regulate the value thereof."

To save interest on the public debt, we believe it would be sound policy for the Government to issue non-interest-bearing Treasury notes, not exceeding $3,000,000,000, in providing relief funds or financing any further public-works projects. In issuing such currency definite provision should be made for its redemption at a given rate per year.

13. Railroads: Railroads should cooperate to reduce competitive expenses; unnecessary services should be abandoned, metropolitan terminals consolidated, and circuitous haulage eliminated. We believe that railroads should be permitted to engage in motor transportation under proper conditions.

The Grange is unalterably opposed to the proposal for the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause of the Transportation Act, which provides that railroads may not charge more for a shorter haul than for a longer one over the same line and in the same direction.

14. Motor transportation: We approve of the appropriations made by the Federal Government for highway construction, including the allocation of a just proportion of such funds for the improvement of farm-to-market roads. The attitude of the Grange regarding the regulation and taxation of motor vehicles is as follows:

(a) The interest and safety of the public require the enforcement of proper restrictions regarding the size, weight, and speed of all motor vehicles moving over the public highway.

(b) Such regulations should be uniform as between the several States, and there should be reciprocity between the States based on such uniformity.

(c) The power to regulate is a police power lodged with the States. As a basis for regulation, we commend to all the States adoption of the uniform code for the regulation of traffic approved by the American Association of State Highway Officials and the United States Bureau of Public Roads.

(d) With respect to highway taxation, each motor vehicle should be taxed its fair share of the cost of the highways which it uses. The State should be the sole taxing agency.

(e) Every special tax collected for highway improvement should be conserved for that purpose alone. Consequently, no gasoline-tax diversion should be permitted.

(f) No taxation or regulation of motor vehicles should be permitted which has for its purpose any increase in cost or restriction in use in order to equalize competition between motor transportation and other forms of transportation.

(g) We advocate the repeal of the Motor Carriers' Act of 1935 on the ground that this legislation is not in the public interest.

15. Inland waterways: Since the Federal Government, over a period of many years, has expended large sums of money for the development and improvement of our inland waterways, the Grange is opposed to the adoption of any policy which would destroy the value of this wise investment. Our water-borne commerce should not be hindered or restricted by unnecessary regulation and interference on the part of the Government.

We favor ratification of the pending treaty calling for the completion of the St. Lawrence seaway and the development of hydroelectric power contemplated in this project.

16. Rural electrification: We approve of the efforts of the Government to promote the cause of rural electrification through the agency of the R. E. A. In the making of loans the present policy of giving preference to public power districts and nonprofit cooperative associations should be continued.

17. Governmental reorganization: We approve of the steps being taken toward the reorganization and reclassification of the various boards and commissions of the Federal Government. Such agencies as have outlived their usefulness should be discarded, and duplication and overlapping should be eliminated in the interest of economy and efficiency. Administrative units relating to farm affairs should all come under the Department of Agriculture.

18. Crop insurance: We favor the adoption of a workable system of crop insurance under the auspices of the Federal Government. Such a plan should be on a voluntary basis, to be tried out on a limited scale.

19. Agricultural research: We favor continued Federal support of agricultural research, particularly with a view to discovering new uses for farm products and the utilization of surplus crops. Further experimentation in the manufacture of industrial alcohol from farm products would be especially helpful.

20. Agricultural education: We approve of the additional appropriations authorized at recent sessions of Congress for the endowment of land-grant colleges and for the further development of extension work in agriculture and in home economics, together with more adequate funds for the support of State experiment stations. We likewise approve of the expanded program for vocational education.

The Smith-Lever Act should be so amended as to forbid direct or indirect contributions to the Agricultural Extension Service on the part of private citizens, chambers of commerce, farm organizations, or similar groups, so that extension workers shall be paid entirely from public funds, leaving them free to serve the people without favoritism or discrimination. In no case should any farm organization be allowed to graft itself upon the Extension Service nor dominate it to serve its own ends.

21. Forestry and conservation: We recommend the adoption of a comprehensive Federal program relating to forestry and conservation, and embracing—

(a) Encouragement and assistance to private owners in the extension of farm forestry and in the adoption of practices for sustained timber production.

(b) Giving more adequate protection from fire to both public and private forest and range lands, with greater emphasis on the control of insect pests, diseases, and the prevention of floods and erosion.

(c) Providing for more adequate development and maintenance of national-forest recreational and wildlife resources.

(d) Providing for public acquisition of forests and other lands not suitable for private ownership, with adequate reimbursement to counties in lieu of taxes during a readjustment of the tax program.

22. Pooling mineral wealth: We favor action by Congress that will promote and encourage the pooling of petroleum and other mineral resources underlying farm lands.

23. Predatory animals: We favor legislation providing for joint appropriations by the Federal Government, together with States and counties, for the eradication of predatory animals in sections where such animals are a serious menace to agriculture.

24. Imitation dairy products: It is of vital interest to the dairy industry, as well as to the consuming public, that all legislation for the control and regulation of manufacturers of and dealers in imitation dairy products should remain in full force and effect. We emphasize our support of the essential features of an oleomargarine control law, namely:

(a) Adequate licensing of manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers.

(b) An inclusive definition of the imitation product, including color specification.

(c) Clear provision for labeling and notice to the buyer.

(d) License fees and tax sufficient to cover cost of enforcing the law and to prevent unfair competition with the dairy industry.

(e) We ask for such legislation as may be necessary to prevent mail order or other interstate sales of oleomargarine which are in violation of such laws as are now in force or may hereafter be enacted.

(f) We approve of the action of Congress in placing a 3-cent tax on certain oils imported from abroad and used in this country in the making of butter substitutes. We likewise advocate the extension of this tax to all oils so used, or which otherwise compete with the products of the American farm.

25. Packers and Stockyards Act: We advocate the amendment of the Packers and Stockyards Act to provide for the more effective regulation by the Department of Agriculture of the marketing of livestock. Direct buying by the packers, merely in an effort to evade the law and depress prices, should not be further tolerated. Packers should likewise be prevented from engaging in large-scale feeding projects, either directly or through financial interest.

We favor a congressional investigation of the packing industry, with a view to uncovering existing abuses and paving the way for remedial legislation.

26. Argentine sanitary pact: Since American agriculture in the past has suffered heavy losses from foot-and-mouth disease, brought in from other countries, we are opposed to the ratification of the pending convention or treaty with the Argentine. Approval of the treaty would open our markets to imports of animal products from zones or areas in the Argentine that are supposed to be free from foot-and-mouth disease, although it is prevalent in other parts of the country. This would expose our flocks and herds to the danger of infection.

27. Pure Food and Drugs Act: We favor amendment of the present statute relating to pure food and drugs in such a manner as to bring collateral advertising within the scope of the act.

28. Control of liquor traffic: We favor the adoption of adequate measures by the Federal Government to protect dry States in the enforcement of their laws against the sale and use of intoxicating liquors, fulfilling the pledge that was made by the advocates of repeal of the eighteenth amendment. Shipments of liquor passing through dry States should be under seal, and bills of lading should be filed with the secretary of state at point of origin.

We are opposed to excessive taxes on liquor, because taxes that are too high will encourage bootlegging, official corruption, and general violation of the law.

We recommend that granges throughout the land join with other organizations in a campaign of education, calling attention to the evil effects of strong drink, exposing the fallacy of the idea that any nation can drink its way to prosperity, and emphasizing the truth that decency and sobriety are virtues that bring their own reward.

29. Imported dairy products: The Lenroot-Taber Milk Act of 1927 should be broadened so as to require that butter, cheese, and other imported dairy products meet the same sanitary requirements that are in effect domestically.

30. Imported starches: We favor adequate excise taxes on tapioca, sago, and cassava, now entering this country duty free, and competing with domestically produced farm products.

31. Land ownership: We favor immediate action prohibiting land ownership or leasing in the name of minor children born in the United States of alien parents when the latter are prevented by law from leasing or owning land.

32. Statehood for Hawaii: Since the major portion of the population of the Territory of Hawaii is composed of those who are ineligible to become citizens of the United States, we are opposed to the admission of this Territory to statehood.

33. Honest merchandising: We favor legislation for truth in fabrics, both for the benefit of agriculture and the protection of the consumer. Labeling shoes to indicate the materials used in their manufacture should likewise be required.

Manufacturers of zinc-coated roofing and fencing should be required to appropriately label their products as a guide to purchasers.

34. Registration of lobbyists: We are opposed to the enactment of any legislation for the regulation of lobbying that would be violative of the constitutional rights of the people. But we condemn the exercise of undue pressure or the expenditure of large sums of money by selfish interests in the effort to shape legislation or to control public policy. We have no objection to the idea that lobbyists should be required to register and make a proper financial accounting.

35. Taking profits out of war: We reaffirm our position in favor of taking the profits out of war. In the event of future armed conflict, wealth as well as manpower should be conscripted. The manufacture of armaments and munitions for national defense should be taken over by the Government in time of war.

36. World peace: We earnestly advocate that the Government of the United States continue to exert every effort to promote peace and good will among nations. Since disarmament on a purely national basis is not practicable, we cherish the hope that our Government may use its best endeavors to bring about reduction in armaments on an international scale.

We favor a sound neutrality policy that will save America from becoming entangled in foreign wars of greed, hatred, and aggression, and which are of no direct concern to us.

LICENSING OF INTERSTATE CORPORATIONS

Mr. BORAH. I introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received, printed in the RECORD, and referred as requested by the Senator from Idaho.

The bill (S. 721) to provide for the licensing of corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to provide for the licensing of corporations engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Corporation Licensing Act of 1937."

LICENSE REQUIRED FOR INTERSTATE OR FOREIGN BUSINESS

SEC. 2. On and after — days from the date of enactment of this act, it shall be unlawful for any corporation (except a bank, a common carrier subject to the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, a common carrier or, insofar as engaged in radio broadcasting, a licensee, subject to the Communications Act of 1934, a China Trade Act corporation, or a corporation the majority of the stock of which is held by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof or corporations engaged in publishing newspapers, magazines, or books) organized under the laws of the United States or the District of Columbia, or of any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or of any foreign country, to engage directly or indirectly in interstate or foreign commerce, without first having obtained a license therefor from the Federal Trade Commission (hereinafter referred to as the "Commission"); and for the purposes of this act, a corporation shall be deemed to be engaged in interstate or foreign commerce if it holds control (through stock ownership, a voting trust or trusts, a holding company or companies, or any other direct or indirect means) of a corporation engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, or of two or more corporations, any one of which is engaged in interstate or foreign commerce. As used in this act, the term "interstate or foreign commerce" means commerce between any place in a State, Territory, or possession of the United States, or the District of Columbia, and any place outside thereof; or between points within the same State or within the District of Columbia, but through any place outside thereof.

ISSUANCE OF LICENSES

SEC. 3. (a) Before any license shall be issued under this act the applicant corporation shall file with the Commission a sworn statement with respect to its operations, which shall include information concerning its organization and financial structure, the character of its transactions in interstate or foreign commerce, the terms, position, rights, and privileges of the different classes of its securities outstanding, the terms on which its securities have been offered to the public or otherwise, the property taken by the corporation at the time of its organization and the consideration paid therefor in money or otherwise, its bonded indebtedness and the interests of the promoters therein, the personnel and salaries of its management, its charter and bylaws, the number and local distribution of its stockholders, contracts made with promoters and with financial interests with respect to the organization of the corporation, management, and service contracts, special legislation relating to the corporation, its profits and losses for not more than the —— preceding fiscal years, and such further information with respect to the operations of the corporation as the Commission may, by regulation, require as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors.

(b) Application for such licenses shall be made, and the licenses shall be issued, in such manner as the Commission shall, by regulation prescribe. Each such license shall contain such terms and conditions as the Commission shall prescribe as necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this Act, shall be effective from the date specified therein, and shall continue in effect until suspended or revoked.

(c) The Commission shall by order deny the application for a license of any applicant corporation which fails to comply with the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, or if the Commission finds that the applicant corporation is an unlawful trust or combination in violation of the antitrust laws as designated in section 1 of the act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, that it is a party to any contract, combination in the form of trust, or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce in violation of such laws, or that it is monopolizing, or attempting to monopolize, or combining or conspiring with any other person to monopolize, any part of such trade or commerce.

REVOCATION OF LICENSES

SEC. 4. After appropriate opportunity for notice and hearing, the Commission is authorized by order to suspend or revoke any such license if it finds that the corporation to which the license was issued has violated any provision of this act or any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission made thereunder; and the Commission shall revoke the license of any corporation which has been finally adjudged guilty by a Federal court in any proceeding, civil or criminal, of a violation of the antitrust laws.

REPORTS AND EXAMINATIONS

SEC. 5. (a) Each corporation which obtains a license under this act shall make an annual report to the Commission, certified if required by the rules and regulations of the Commission by independent public accountants, which shall contain such information with respect to the organization, capitalization, properties, earnings, profits, dividends, and business methods of the corporation, as the Commission may prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Each such corporation shall also make such special reports, similarly certified, as the Commission shall from time to time require for the purpose of keeping itself informed with respect to the operations of the corporation, and in the event that any such corporation shall increase its capital or issue any bonds, notes, debentures, or similar obligations it shall submit a statement with respect thereto to the Commission. The Commission may prescribe, in regard to reports and statements made pursuant to this section, the form or forms in which the required information shall be set forth, the items or details to be shown in the balance sheet and the earning statement, and the methods to be followed in the preparation of reports, in the appraisal or valuation of assets and liabilities, in the determination of depreciation and depletion, in the differentiation of recurring and nonrecurring income, in the differentiation of investment and operating income, and in the preparation, where the Commission deems it necessary or desirable, of separate and/or consolidated balance sheets or income accounts of any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by the corporation, or any person under direct or indirect common control with the corporation; but in the case of the reports and statements of any corporation whose methods of accounting are prescribed, or whose securities are registered, under the provisions of any law of the United States, or any rule or regulation thereunder, the rules and regulations of the Commission with respect to such reports and statements shall not be inconsistent with the requirements imposed by such law or rule or regulation in respect of the same subject matter.

(b) The Commission is further authorized to provide for periodical or special examinations of the corporations which obtain licenses under this act and to establish a schedule of reasonable fees for such examinations and for the issuance of licenses under this act. All such fees shall be collected by the Commission in such manner as it may direct, and the amount of all fees so collected shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

INVESTIGATIONS

SEC. 6. (a) The Commission may, in its discretion, make such investigations as it deems necessary to determine whether any person has violated or is about to violate any provision of this act or any rule or regulation thereunder, and may require or permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as the Commission shall determine, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated. The Commission is authorized, in its discretion, to publish information concerning any such violations, and to investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters which it may deem necessary or proper to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this act, in the prescribing of rules and regulations thereunder, or in securing information to serve as a basis for recommending further legislation concerning the matters to which this act relates.

(b) For the purpose of any such investigation, or any other proceeding under this act, any member of the Commission or any officer designated by it is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, or other records which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such records may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

(c) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena issued to, any person, the Commission may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such investigation or proceeding is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission or member or officer designated by the Commission, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or wherever he may be found. Any person who shall, without just cause, fail or refuse to attend and testify or to answer any lawful inquiry or to produce books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, and other records, if in his power so to do, in obedience to the subpena of the Commission, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be subject to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than 1 year, or both.

(d) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, contracts, agreements, and other records and documents before the Commission, or in obedience of the subpena of the Commission or any member thereof or any officer designated by it, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Commission under this act, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

INJUNCTIONS AND PROSECUTION OF OFFENSES

SEC. 7. (a) Whenever it shall appear to the Commission that any person is engaged or about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of the provisions of this act, or of any rule or regulation thereunder, it may in its discretion bring an action in the proper district court of the United States, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, or the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States to enjoin such acts or practices, and upon a proper showing a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond. The Commission may transmit such evidence as may be available concerning such acts or practices to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, institute the necessary criminal proceedings under this act.

(b) Upon application of the Commission the district courts of the United States, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall also have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this act or any order of the Commission made in pursuance thereof.

COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS

SEC. 8. (a) Any person aggrieved by an order issued by the Commission in a proceeding under this act to which such person is a party (except an order under section 4 revoking a license for violation of the antitrust laws) may obtain a review of such order in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States, within any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order, a written petition praying that the order of the Commission be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon any member of the Commission, and thereupon the Commission shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the record upon which the order complained of was entered. Upon the filing of such transcript such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, and enforce or set aside such order, in whole or in part. No objection to the order of the Commission shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commission. The finding of the Commission as to the facts, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commission, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commission and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commission may modify its findings as to the facts, by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which, if supported by substantial evidence, shall be conclusive, and its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court affirming, modifying, and enforcing or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such order of the Commission, shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Commission's order.

JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

SEC. 9. The district courts of the United States, the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction of violations of this act or the rules and regulations thereunder, and of all suits in equity and actions at law brought to enforce any liability or duty created by this act or the rules and regulations thereunder. Any criminal proceeding may be brought in the district wherein any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Any suit or action to enforce any liability or duty created by this act or rules and regulations thereunder, or to enjoin any violation of such act or rules and regulations, may be brought in any such district or in the district wherein the defendant is found or is an inhabitant or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any other district of which the defendant is an inhabitant or wherever the defendant may be found. Judgments and decrees so rendered shall be subject to review as provided in sections 128 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 225 and 347). No costs shall be assessed for or against the Commission in any proceeding under this title brought by or against it in any such court.

BALANCING THE BUDGET

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, at the last session of the Congress I introduced a joint resolution having for its purpose an automatically balanced budget. It was not feasible to press its consideration at that time due to emergency legislation then pending. I am hopeful that the Appropriations Committee may find time to consider the joint resolution at the present session of Congress.

Briefly, I may state, the joint resolution supplements the present Budget law. It would provide that the President of the United States, immediately upon the convening of each Congress, shall submit a budget, which budget shall show the amount of money which is recommended to be allocated to each executive department, independent commission, board, bureau, office, or agency, or other establishment of the Federal Government. When that was done the Congress could reduce or increase the amount of money allocated to any governmental department, but if it should increase the amount of money allocated to any governmental department it would have to decrease correspondingly the appropriation for some other department or departments by a like amount so that expenditures would be within the income of the Government. In other words, the President would estimate the entire income of the Government and such income would be allocated by him according to his consideration of what each department should have. The Congress could change these figures, but it could not allocate in toto more money than the estimated income of the Government.

However, it might want to appropriate more money than would be represented by the Government's income. In that event, were the Congress to provide more money for all appropriations than the estimated income, the Congress would have to provide additional income in one of two ways: First, it could, of course, provide extra money by additional taxation. If it did not want to do that because of difficult times or inadvisability for one reason or another, it could authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow the extra money, in which event it would have to provide the means of paying off the borrowed money within a period of 15 years after the loan was contracted, so that each measure authorizing the borrowing of additional money would carry with it the means of amortizing the loan.

This policy is in effect in some of the States of the Union. It is significant to note that the States where it is in effect are in a very fine financial condition as compared with those States which have no budgetary checks and balances in reference to income and appropriation.

In brief, the joint resolution provides that when the Government income is ascertained or estimated as accurately as it can be, it shall be allocated to the various departments of the Government.

There would be a sharp debate, it occurs to me, as to whether the Military Establishment should have more money than was recommended or less money, or whether the Department of Agriculture should have more money or less money. In the event it was felt that the Department of Agriculture should have more money than was allocated to it, then the Congress would be put upon its mettle to take that appropriation from the Military or Naval Establishment or some other department of the Government so that expenses and income would be in balance. In the event, however, that more money should be appropriated than was available from the income of Government, Congress would have to provide the extra money through additional taxation or, if it authorized the Treasury Department to borrow the additional money, it would have to provide the means of liquidating the loan. I cannot conceive of any case where there would be an emergency so great that the plan would not work. Certainly it would have worked in the case of all measures which we have enacted during the last 4 years.

At present there is no consideration of the amount of money spent by one department in relation to the money spent by another department. Each department's appropriation bill is considered separately. No effort is made to determine whether the War Department should get 2 percent or 8 percent or 20 percent of the governmental income, or whether the Department of Agriculture should get 2 or 8 or 10 percent.

An individual having an income ascertains how much he will spend for essentials and how much he will spend for things above what he may call essentials; but in the case of the Government the Congress takes up each appropriation bill separately without any consideration as to whether a large percentage of the Government's income or a small percentage is being provided for a particular department.

It seems to me the whole governmental picture should be considered at one time, that we ought to pass the Budget in toto, so to speak, after debate as to whether or not large or small sums should be given to any one department.

As stated, if this plan should be adopted, it would mean that there would be a consideration of the whole governmental problem, each department taking its relative position, and we would not consider just one department at a time, which invariably leads to deficits and makes deficiency appropriations always necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator is discussing a very interesting and important subject. I should like to ask whether the joint resolution proposes to restrict the power of the Budget authorities so that they shall not suggest or recommend appropriations in excess of the total estimated revenues?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to answer the Senator's question. It does not. The Budget authorities would submit to Congress what they conceive the estimated revenue to be, on the one hand. They would then recommend how that total revenue should be expended. If, then, additional projects were recommended by the Budget authorities or the Executive, they could suggest how the necessary additional revenue should be raised. The Congress could take it or leave it.

Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. Then if the Congress should see fit to make a different allocation within the aggregate of the revenue from that recommended by the Budget authorities, that action could be taken without limitation?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. In other words, the Congress would have the power to make notable increases as to some of the departments or agencies, and correspondingly notable decreases as to others?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. But if it made such different allocations from those suggested by the Budget as to require additional revenues, it must then find the means of supplying the funds necessary to meet the additional allocations?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true; either by immediate taxation or by ultimate taxation.

Mr. ROBINSON. So that under the plan the Senator advances, he would expect that the Budget would be in constant and continuous balance after the plan was once inaugurated?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. ROBINSON. Congress could either increase the taxes, levy new taxes, or authorize loans; but at no time would the appropriations be made without consideration of the means for meeting the expenditures?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. I thank the Senator for his concise contribution.

Mr. BYRNES and other Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. Before I yield again, let me point out one thing which perhaps is not sufficiently stressed.

In a period, we will assume, of great agricultural emergency there might be an enormous sum of money expended on the Army and Navy. Of course, if we should take the revenues of the Government and expend them on the Army and Navy to a large extent we should not have available the money necessary to take care of an agricultural emergency. It strikes me, therefore, that instead of considering the military bill and the agricultural bill and the Treasury bill as separate measures, the whole fabric of the Government income and expenditures ought to be considered at one time, so that there would be some relative consideration as to whether $2 should be spent for the Army and Navy and $1 for agriculture, or $2 for agriculture and $1 for the Army and Navy. I think we get into serious difficulty by looking only at one phase of the Government's activities at one time, rather than the entire governmental picture.

Mr. BYRNES and Mr. BORAH addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield first to the Senator from South Carolina. Then I will yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question.

Under existing law the Executive is charged with the duty of doing what the Senator has in mind. After investigation and consideration of the needs of the departments, as urged by them, the Executive must determine the amount that will be asked of the Congress for the various departments.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator now propose that instead of the Executive determining the amount—or the percentage, if we choose to calculate it in percentages—the Congress shall do that instead of the Executive?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Executive only recommends. Under the proposed plan the Congress may depart from his recommendations in any way it wishes; but it must adopt the budget before separate appropriation bills are passed upon, and in that case it is bound not to exceed in its appropriations for all purposes the total amount of the budget.

Mr. BYRNES. Let us assume that the Executive submitted this week a budget representing the considered opinion of the Executive as to the needs of the various departments. Is it the plan of the Senator from Maryland that the Congress, taking that budget, would determine that a certain amount should be designated as the total amount of expenditures by the Congress, after considering the requests presented through the President?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. How could the Congress do that until the various committees had gone into a study of the needs of the departments as presented by the President?

Mr. TYDINGS. The President's budget would contain a recommended appropriation for each department.

Mr. BYRNES. And a total of all.

Mr. TYDINGS. And a total of all. It is my thought that the Budget would be automatically referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the main duty of that committee would be to see what proportion of the total income was to be allocated to each of the departments.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Maryland is a member of the Appropriations Committee. I desire to ask him how the Appropriations Committee could intelligently determine what proportion of the total income should be allocated to each of the departments until they had hearings upon the various bills, in order to determine the relative importance of the various proposals? That is the question to which I wish to get an answer. Should we not still have to go through hearings by the respective subcommittees in order to determine the relative importance of the requests?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BYRNES. Otherwise, we should be acting without full information.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not think that is accurate, for the reason that there are certain routine, fixed expenses in every department. They are pretty general, and have been general over a long period of years. They may be called routine expenditures which the committee would quickly recognize. There would be no novelty, no increase or decrease, in a routine expenditure. Then, added to that, for each department would be the new ventures upon which it hoped to embark; so that the only real consideration at that particular time would be as to how many of the new ventures would fit into the estimated income of the Government.

Let me point out the fallacy of the present system. When we get the appropriation bill for the Army or for the Department of Agriculture, or for any other Government agency, we consider it without any reference to any other department of the Government. The Naval Affairs Committee may make recommendations for certain naval increases; the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry may make recommendations for certain agricultural increases, and what do we do? Do we compute how much money we have to spend on these items? No; we consider them absolutely separately, without any reference to the merit of the claims of one department or another.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator refers to the necessity of considering new ventures. Is it not a fact that no new ventures would be included in any of the estimates for the appropriation bills unless for such new ventures there were authority of law, which means an act of the Congress?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think I see the Senator's point, which at first escaped me. His point is, how could the Appropriations Committee know how much it was going to recommend for the Army and Navy when the whole Budget was submitted to it? It is my thought that no bill would be definitely passed until all of the bills were investigated, exactly as they are now investigated, and therefore we should have a composite picture of the whole situation when the Budget was adopted.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me ask the Senator another question, because it is my belief that there can be no intelligent determination of a total amount until the various subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee have gone into the various bills.

Mr. TYDINGS. Granted.

Mr. BYRNES. As a matter of fact, the full Committee on Appropriations in each House must pass upon each of the bills; and upon that committee there sit the members of the Army subcommittee and the naval subcommittee, who must give consideration to the entire picture.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with the Senator; but what I am pointing out is that those subcommittees could meet just as they now meet, the separate bills could be approved just as they are now approved, but no one of them could be passed until they fitted into an entire national picture. There would not be any place where there would be a lack of consideration.

Mr. BYRNES. I shall interrupt the Senator but one moment more.

Mr. TYDINGS. I only wish to answer the Senator's question; that is all.

Mr. BYRNES. As to the new ventures, is it the Senator's idea that as to any subsequent legislation enacted by the Congress there should be carried automatically provision for revenue? To illustrate what I mean: If, for instance, a drought should develop in the West, demanding a large appropriation, and the Congress by the passage of a bill should authorize an appropriation of $300,000,000 to relieve such a drought condition, is it the Senator's idea that the bill should carry the revenue for that expenditure?

Mr. TYDINGS. First of all, if it were put into the main Budget bill, it would be necessary to reduce the appropriation for the other departments sufficiently to make up the $300,000,000. If we are to appropriate $300,000,000 that we do not have, for which the estimated income of the Government will not furnish sufficient money, then if we authorize the money to be borrowed, we ought at the same time to provide the means for liquidating the $300,000,000 over a period of not more than 15 years.

Mr. BYRNES. That is what I am asking the Senator. Assuming that we have ascertained the revenue and have apportioned it to the various regular departments of the Government, and thereafter the Congress determines upon an additional expenditure—illustrating it by the suggested drought expenditure—we should then, as we have provided for an allotment of the regular revenue, provide the additional revenue. If that be so, and if for every additional expenditure there must be provision for raising additional revenue, exactly how would the Senator provide for it?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has not a clear conception of what I attempted to say in the first part of my remarks.

Mr. BYRNES. I am sorry that is the case.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us suppose there were 10 measures calling for extra appropriations, and the aggregate of them should amount to $500,000,000. In that case we should have to provide taxes equal to $500,000,000 to pay off the amount immediately; or, if the $500,000,000 were borrowed, we should have to provide taxes which would pay off the amount over a period of 15 years. We should not, however, have additional taxes carried in each of the separate 10 items of appropriation.

Mr. BYRNES. That is what I wanted the Senator to say. Then at the conclusion of a session, when all additional expenditures have been determined, a revenue bill must be introduced to provide the necessary amount, or authority must be given to borrow?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ADAMS and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator from Colorado rose first. I yield to him, after which I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maryland to make clear the coordination between the House and the Senate in appropriation bills under his plan. As we know, appropriation bills must originate in the House of Representatives.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to know what the function of the Senate would be, and how far the Senate Appropriations Committee and the Senate as a body would be limited, under the Senator's plan, in their independence of action.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senate would have all the rights it now has. The House would have all the rights it now has. The House would act first, and when its Budget was adopted the Budget would come to us for approval. We could enlarge it or decrease it, but if we enlarged it we should have to appropriate additional sums. Obviously, however, if we did enlarge it, the enlargement would not be good until the House concurred in the increased appropriation.

Mr. ADAMS. That is, the Budget would be a separate measure?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Budget would be a separate measure, and the fabric of the Government would be considered as a whole. We would take the estimated income and allocate it among the different departments according to merit, whereas now there is absolutely no relationship between how much is appropriated for the Army and how much is appropriated for agriculture and how much is appropriated for relief and how much is appropriated for the Navy. The net result is that when we reach the end of each session, we find a large deficiency created, without any thought of where the money is to come from, and our usual procedure is then to authorize that the excess be borrowed without any thought of how the debt will be paid.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is there any real or necessary relationship between the amount the Army may need and the amount agriculture may need?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. How can that relationship be determined?

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me ask the Senator is there any real relationship in this own personal budget between the amount he provides for rent, for food, and for clothing and the sums he may expend for the purchase of a Victrola or an automobile? Naturally he is going to take care of the essentials first and find out how much he has over for trimmings.

Mr. BARKLEY. The relationship between the various items of my personal expenditures, of course, depends upon my income and my credit.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, no personal reference was intended.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand; the Senator's question is apropos.

I do not see how we can determine the needs for the Army by determining first the needs of the farmer, or vice versa. I do not see how we can determine how much of a Navy we ought to have by first deciding how much the Bureau of Forestry ought to get for the purpose of reforestation, or how much ought to be appropriated for soil erosion, or for relief, or for rivers and harbors, or for anything else.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I do not believe the Senator understood me accurately in regard to that matter. I do not mean to say that the amount of assistance given to agriculture will determine how large our Navy or Army ought to be. What I am saying is that we have so much money to spend, and we are sent here to spend it as wisely as we can in keeping with the requirements of the people and the Nation as a whole, and under the present system no thought is given to the relationship between the amount of money spent for one purpose and the amount of money spent for another purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I understand the Senator's plan, it contemplates one omnibus appropriation bill, brought in, first, by the Committee on Appropriations of the House, though not necessarily, because there is no law that requires that appropriation bills originate in the House. It is customary, and it is done, but they are not on the same basis with revenue bills, which must originate in the House. But in order to coordinate all the expenses and the amounts to be allocated to the various departments would it not be necessary to have a single omnibus appropriation bill, in which would be allocated to each department the amount to which the Committee on Appropriations decided it was entitled?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. And if the amount provided in the bill went beyond the estimated revenues—which are always estimated and never absolutely certain—no matter what the emergency might be, or what the status of the session might be, that appropriation bill, if the amount carried in it exceeded the estimated income for the year, would have to be laid on a shelf until the process of imposing new taxes was initiated in the House, or a bond issue was made to cover the amount.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator was not in the Chamber, I believe, when I explained the matter in beginning my remarks, and, because many other Senators are on the floor now who were not here then, I shall take just a moment to go over what I said at the beginning.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sorry I was not here when the Senator began his remarks; I was delayed.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Budget estimates show the estimated revenues for any particular year. Under the proposed plan the President would allocate the estimated revenues to all the departments, just as he does now. There would be no change in that. The President would say, "We are going to take in so much, and I recommend that it be expended in the following way." The recommendation would come to the Congress. I do not desire to go into all the details as to how it would be considered; I am merely summarizing. The recommendation would come to the Congress, and the Congress could reduce the amount the President had recommended for any department. That is easy. But it could not increase the amount he recommended for any department without taking from other departments a sufficient sum to make up for the increase to any particular department.

Mr. BARKLEY. In that case then, if an appropriation bill came to the Senate from the House and were reported by the committee—and, if I am assuming correctly, under the Senator's plan it would have to be a single omnibus appropriation bill instead of having a separate appropriation for each department——

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. That omnibus appropriation bill would come to the Senate. Let us assume it consumed all of the estimated revenues for that year. Then the only thing left for the Senate Committee on Appropriations, or the Senate itself, would be automatically to rubber-stamp the allocations of the House, or change them in such way as it might see fit. But if making the changes, either in the committee or on the floor of the Senate, involved an increase in the expenditures beyond the estimated revenues, then everything would have to be suspended in midair until we went back to the House in order to provide more taxes, or to secure authorization for a bond issue.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is not correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. How could we deal with it? How could we provide for an increase in taxes on the spur of the moment to take care of an increase in expenditures without going through the necessary legislative process?

Mr. TYDINGS. First of all, the Senate could not increase the expenditures for any department over the estimated revenues without first decreasing the expenditures of some other department or departments in an amount sufficient to make up the increase.

In the event the Senate wished to increase the appropriations beyond the total estimated revenues of the Government, then it should provide the revenue to make up the increase. Otherwise it would be appropriating money, first of all, which it did not have; and, second, which it was not bothering to get, passing on to some succeeding Congress the task of raising the money.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is a practical matter. Of course, the Constitution and the rules of both bodies permit Members to offer amendments. Suppose we had under consideration an appropriation bill which had allocated all the money available to the various departments, the bill came on the floor of the Senate, and some Member of the Senate, exercising his constitutional rights, representing his State, offered an amendment which increased the amount of the appropriation beyond the estimated revenues; then what would happen?

Mr. TYDINGS. Then he would have also to offer, with his amendment, an amendment to cut down some particular appropriation in order to make up the increase.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose the Senate were not willing to cut down the other appropriation?

Mr. TYDINGS. Then the increase would not prevail.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that automatically any Senator would be barred from voting for an increase in an appropriation, no matter how great the emergency, because he would be automatically barred from increasing the revenues in order to take care of it?

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. BARKLEY. We cannot increase the revenues——

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator asks me a question, and then, before I attempt to answer it, he assumes he knows the answer, so what is the use asking the question? If the Senator desires to debate this matter in his own time, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to take the Senator off the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator asks me a question; and when I attempt to answer it, he proceeds to state what he assumes to be the correct answer.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I am trying to make my question a little more understandable, so that the Senator may answer it a little more intelligently.

Mr. TYDINGS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BARKLEY. I now yield to the Senator for the answer he contemplated in the beginning.

Mr. TYDINGS. First of all, the Congress ought not to appropriate more money than the estimated revenues of the Government, as a general proposition, without raising new taxes to provide money with which to pay those appropriations, on the one hand; and, if new taxes are inadvisable, then it should authorize the borrowing of the money and make the taxes gentler by providing for repayment over a period of 15 years instead of immediately.

I stick to my premise, that no one ought to seek to have more money appropriated than the estimated revenues of the Government by offering an amendment to any particular appropriation bill, unless he can succeed in decreasing the appropriation for some item which has not merit equal to that which he attempts to insert in the bill by way of increase. In other words, we must cut our cloth to fit the individual to be clothed. That is, the Budget of the United States ought to contemplate the estimated revenues and how those revenues can be wisely spent. Any policy which leaves the door open to promiscuous appropriations without regard to how much may be available for expenditure or where the money is to come from is not good business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the instance which I cited, which is not at all fantastic, under the Senator's plan, where the Executive has allocated all of the estimated revenues, and an appropriation bill comes into the Senate from the Committee on Appropriations, and some Senator offers an amendment which would result in exceeding the estimated revenue, what would happen at that stage of the proceedings?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator will not allow me to drive home the point that the Senator who offers an amendment to increase an appropriation over and above the revenue must always offer an amendment to reduce the appropriation for some other item in an amount sufficient to make up for the increase.

Let us take a concrete example: We will assume there is an item of $10,000 for new machine guns in the War Department appropriation bill, that branch of the Budget, and that Senators feel that $20,000 ought to be appropriated for cannon, and only $15,000 are appropriated. The amendment of a Senator who so thought would then read: "To strike out '$10,000 for machine guns' and to insert '$5,000', and to strike out '$15,000 for cannon' and to insert '$20,000.'"

The question whether we ought to spend the money for one thing or another is the deciding factor. The Senate then must consider whether it desires to eliminate some item in order to provide for some other item which may be better, in its opinion; but it cannot keep on adding and adding and adding when there is no money in the Federal Treasury to pay for the increases.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose the Senate declines to reduce the appropriation?

Mr. TYDINGS. It cannot; under the law it would be automatic.

Mr. BARKLEY. If I offered an amendment to increase an appropriation——

Mr. TYDINGS. It would not be good unless it carried with it provision for a decrease of some other appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the Senator's plan, I would have to offer simultaneously an amendment reducing the appropriation for some other department. Suppose the Senate declines to reduce the other appropriation. Then where do I stand?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator loses.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, I am automatically barred from presenting an emergency matter for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Oh, no; the Senator may present it 50 times. The Senator may vary the amount, but the Senate will be the ultimate arbiter as to whether or not the item the Senator desires to insert is more worthwhile than the item for which he desires to reduce the total appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to me that makes every Member of the Senate an automaton, to be controlled by the Appropriations Committee, and he is even denied the right to offer an amendment, no matter how emergent the need for an appropriation may be.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; Mr. President, that is not true.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I again direct the attention of the Senator to the question I asked a moment ago. Assume the enactment by the Congress of a law providing for the appropriation of $300,000,000 to relieve drought conditions in the West. The Senator's statement, as I understood it, was that if such an enactment of the Congress were approved by the President, it would be necessary for the Congress before adjournment to provide the necessary revenue to cover the total appropriations. With that in mind, I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that existing law provides, whether the Executive complies with it or not, that with the submission of the Budget, if the estimated receipts for the ensuing fiscal year contained in the Budget on the basis of laws existing at the time of its transmittal, plus the estimated amount in the Treasury at the close of the fiscal year, are less than the estimated expenditures submitted by him in the Budget, the Executive must make recommendation to the Congress for new taxes, loans, or other appropriate action to meet the estimated deficiency; and if it appears that the enactments of the Congress thereafter will create deficiencies, and the President submits to the Congress estimates for deficiency appropriations, he must at the same time submit to the Congress recommendations for revenues to provide the funds to cover such deficiency appropriations or recommend loans for the purpose.

I now ask what change there would be in existing law under the plan proposed by the Senator other than the provision which the Senator says must be made before adjournment. Would he provide that the Congress could not adjourn until it had provided the revenue, or how could we force the action which is really contemplated by the existing law?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that the point he has just raised is provided for in the joint resolution as presented. It would not change the President's functions at all. If the President should recommend that we appropriate more money than would be available to the Treasury, he would have to suggest a method of providing for it, either through the medium of a loan or through the medium of new taxation. That stays just the same. What I am speaking of is that when the Budget is adopted, and we allocate all our estimated revenues among the various departments, if by reason of some subsequent legislation, more money is appropriated than our estimated revenues, we may authorize that it be borrowed, in which case it will have to be amortized over a period of 15 years so as to make the taxation not burdensome, or we may provide that it shall be paid off by imposing an immediate tax.

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator again yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. In just a moment, Mr. President.

What I am first of all trying to make clear to the Senator and to the Senate is that at present in appropriating money for one department no consideration is given to the other departments. How do we prepare the Army bill? How do we prepare the Navy bill? We call on the Navy officials to come before us, and we call on the Army officials to come before us. They tell us their needs, and we give them what we think they ought to have. There is no reference to how much we have to spend for everything the Government does. Only in a remote way is consideration given by the Appropriations Committee at that time to anything except the Navy's needs. We may make the appropriation for the Navy two or three million dollars more than it asks, or even half a billion dollars more.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I recognize that statement as part of the Senator's general statement. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. In just a moment, Mr. President. What I am attempting to do is to provide for consideration of the manner in which the Government's money shall be divided among the different departments in relation to each other.

Mr. BYRNES. I understand the Senator's proposition with respect to that matter, but I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say that that is the practice in Great Britain.

Mr. BYRNES. I so understand.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is a very wise practice, and results in a great national debate in Great Britain as to whether or not the army or the navy or agriculture or shipping gets more of the national revenue than is its fair share when the various emergencies are considered.

Mr. BYRNES. Let me call the attention of the Senator to what he has just said. He has assumed that we have had the Budget submitted to us, that allotments under it have been made, and that there have been enactments of Congress demanding additional expenditures requiring additional revenue. The President, under existing law, must recommend to the Congress——

Mr. TYDINGS. I have all that in the joint resolution.

Mr. BYRNES. If in certain cases the Congress does not now provide revenues, how can the Congress be forced to do so under the plan proposed by the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. TYDINGS. The proposal is not worth anything unless when it becomes law it is adhered to.

Mr. ROBINSON rose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to make a further statement in the short while remaining. I know the Senator from Arkansas is anxious to have this debate wound up as quickly as possible.

Mr. ROBINSON. No, Mr. President; I did not rise for that purpose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thought the Senator did.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I did rise for the purpose of submitting another practical question to the Senator. With many of the statements he has made I am in hearty accord. I wish to ask him a question, however. Does he not see the practical difficulty in operating the plan embraced in his joint resolution growing out of the requirement in the Constitution that all bills for raising revenue must originate in the House of Representatives? That, by practice and precedent, has been construed to include tax bills and loans.

With that in mind, assume that the House should pass an omnibus appropriation bill allotting all the revenue, and that the Senate, with the expectation that additional revenues would be provided, should increase the aggregate amount of the omnibus bill substantially, say by half a billion dollars, so as to make it a question of practical importance. Suppose that in the conference the House, being opposed, we assume, to increasing taxes or making a new loan, should resist the Senate amendment; but, in order to prevent a total failure of legislation, suppose there also should happen what we know usually occurs in connection with large appropriation bills—namely, that some compromise should be effected, or an agreement reached, and that the bill should actually appropriate $250,000,000 in excess of the estimated revenues. The proposed joint resolution—and, for that matter, existing legislation—would impose upon someone the obligation of initiating additional legislation to provide the funds required to meet the deficit thus created.

Assuming, however, that there is no power to compel the exercise of the authority to appropriate public money—I think the precedents are to the effect that there is practically no limitation on it, and neither is there any enforceable method of compelling the exercise of what is necessarily a discretion in the legislative branch of the Government—suppose that the House of Representatives should fail to initiate the necessary legislation to provide for the deficit. The Senate could not do it, because the Constitution forbids it to do so. What would result, then, with respect to the Budget? The Budget would again be out of balance by the same old process that is now in vogue.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator, I think, overlooks the fact that if the Senate should increase the appropriations by $250,000,000 or $500,000,000, in the plan envisaged the action would not be official until the House should concur in the Senate increase.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course I did not overlook that point. I discussed it. I assume that will happen which we all know happens here when we pass almost every important appropriation. Sharp differences exist between the two Houses. The Senate wants an appropriation. The House does not want it. In order to prevent the failure of legislation, conferees agree, and the respective bodies adopt the conference report, and it becomes law. There is no other way of getting an agreement when a difference exists. The Senate thinks the House ought to initiate legislation necessary to provide the additional revenues. The House, however, says, "That is our function; and, notwithstanding the fact that you have added a large amount to this general appropriation bill, and we have agreed to it in order to prevent the failure of legislation, we do not know of any source from which this additional fund properly can be obtained." In any event, I am assuming that no legislation is actually passed on the subject. I simply point out that we are right back where we started, and we have a failure to keep the Budget balanced. There is no way under the Constitution, that I know of, whereby such a condition can be avoided if the Congress appropriates money in excess of the aggregate amount of the revenue.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate the observation made by the Senator from Arkansas, and the way I should like to answer at the moment is that, in considering a plan to try to put, according to my way of seeing it, some order into Government finance, I realize that there are many barriers and obstacles to any plan that may be reduced to paper. It was my thought, however, that if the plan were sound, the obstacles and barriers could be eliminated. One of them has been presented by the Senator from Arkansas in a very pertinent observation; but I still hold to the belief that the plan itself, after proper study, can overcome the obstacles that stand in its way and that the Nation would stand to profit by its adoption.

I do not mean to say that this is the last word. Of course, the committee would find many imperfections in the proposal, and they would propose many changes. I return, however, to the premise that Congress ought not to expend more money than is represented by the receipts of the Government unless it raises new revenue or provides a bond issue with proper amortization requirements. That is what every business in the country does; and the fact that we are the leading and greatest business, the one that handles the most money, is no reason why we should not profit by the excellent business administrations that have been carried on by lesser concerns and interests.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. May I ask the Senator from Maryland what the Budget Bureau is for?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Budget Bureau is to estimate the probable revenues and to allocate them generally among the different departments.

Mr. GLASS. And to determine which are the worthiest items.

Mr. TYDINGS. To determine which are worthy; but I do not want——

Mr. GLASS. It looks as if the Senator wants Congress to go into the budgetary business.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want the Budget Bureau to determine for me which are the worthiest items. I do not think they have the right to determine in a democratic form of government which are the worthiest items.

Mr. GLASS. They do not determine the matter. They simply reach a conclusion after investigation and make their recommendations to Congress. It is then for Congress to determine whether their recommendation shall be accepted or rejected.

Mr. TYDINGS. Exactly, and that is what I would still have done, except that I would have the Congress give more thought to relative appropriations and not take them up separately without any regard to whether a third or fourth or fifth of the money used for certain purposes was more needed for some other department or activity.

Mr. GLASS. Is not that exactly what is done? It seems to me that the Appropriations Committee always have in mind a complete view and review of proposed appropriations and the revenue available to meet such appropriations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Under the Senator's guidance the Senate Appropriations Committee, I think, has tried to scrutinize every item, and I am not in any way reflecting on the splendid work the Senator and his committee have done. What I pointed out, however, was that I thought the Senator's labors would be somewhat facilitated if the responsibility were imposed on Congress of not appropriating more money than was available to the Treasury and going about it in a businesslike way.

Mr. GLASS. The Congress does not seem to be adverse to taking the responsibility of appropriating more money than it has.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; but I should like to correct that evil by providing that if the revenue is not available the Congress shall raise the money which it is going to spend.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to apologize to the Senator from Texas, because he has risen several times and I have not had an opportunity to yield to him.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is perfectly satisfactory. The Senator from Texas has not much seniority here; he is a very humble Member and is glad to be yielded to under any circumstances.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Texas makes up in ability whatever he may lack in seniority.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. I have a very high regard for his conceptions of free government and constitutional processes, but I wish to suggest to him that the control of the purse goes right back to the beginnings of parliamentary government. Whenever the Senator makes it harder for Congress to control appropriations he is making it easier for other departments to run the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate what the Senator says.

Mr. CONNALLY. The control of appropriations involves not simply their grant but their refusal, and I should be very reluctant to vote for any sort of a measure which would limit the absolute power of the Congress to appropriate money for any purpose at any time it wants to. I did not vote in the other House many years ago for the so-called Budget bill limiting the right of Congress to appropriate subject to some little bureau which sits in the Treasury Department. One almost has to go there on hands and knees and wear out his vest on the floor in order to get for Congress the right to make an appropriation. I have high regard for the Senator, but I must challenge his philosophy when he seeks to set up more barriers and make it more difficult for the representatives of the people who own the purse to handle the purse anyway they want to handle it. It is one of the glories of democracy that it has the right and power, if it wants to do so, to act as a damned fool [laughter], and if Congress spends more money than it should, the people back home, if they are wise, will retire us.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator intimated that under this proposal, if adopted, Congress perhaps could not reduce the appropriations provided for any department. There is nothing in the joint resolution to prevent the Congress from taking all appropriations away from any department without enacting a taxation or any other kind of measure. The only barrier here proposed is that Congress may not appropriate more money than there is in the Treasury without providing how at some time in the future it is going to pay the bill. If that be heresy then, of course, I am guilty of that crime. To me it is just good common sense.

I am not so enthralled with any legislative body as to feel that it has not some imperfections and that certain checks and balances are not good things for it; and I believe that one of those checks and one of those balances is the provision that the Congress ought not willy-nilly to appropriate money without any thought of pay day, because my experience here has been that everybody is more willing to appropriate than to tax; but there must be the "Siamese twins" sometimes somewhere along the road.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee, and then I will yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to suggest to the Senator a very practical difficulty, as it seems to me, to carrying out his plan.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me interrupt the Senator to say now, as I said to our leader, that I do not mean to say that the plan I have drawn will not have to be amended or abridged or, perhaps, rewritten. It would be impossible for me to visualize all the situations which a committee hearing would elicit. I am simply adhering to a plan which would set up a procedure to make appropriations conform to income, on the one hand, with all the picture of the Government's needs being considered, and, if more money should be needed, then to require Congress to provide it either by new taxation immediately or by a loan, which would subsequently be retired.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator's views about that matter are very important just at this time, but it strikes me that there are a good many practical reasons why his proposal could not be put into force. One of those reasons is that oftentimes, as the Senator knows, a great deal of legislation is enacted just at the close of a session of Congress. A great many bills authorizing appropriations are passed at the last moment, and, sometimes, after the two Houses have agreed on a final adjournment resolution, bills authorizing enormous or very considerable appropriations are passed.

After such appropriations have been authorized it is the duty of the Appropriations Committee to report an appropriation of the money. It seems to me that it would be very difficult under our present system, at any rate, without changing it entirely, to adopt a scheme such as the Senator very learnedly suggests. It seems to me it would be very difficult to do it for the practical reason that in the last days of the session so many new appropriations are authorized that it would be impossible for Congress to take care of them.

Mr. TYDINGS. I realize that objection, but I do not think it is paramount at all. I may say to the Senator I do not like referring to my own State, but we have this system in Maryland: We have a constitutional provision under which the State cannot borrow money for a period of more than 15 years, and when money is borrowed it is necessary to provide the taxes to amortize the loan. We have the budget system for the different departments, and the budget is considered as a whole. As a result, during the depression I think Maryland's credit was higher than that of any other State in the Union, at one time, if not now. The first reason was that we were compelled by law to allocate moneys with relativity with reference to the different departments; and the second reason was that we could not be prodigal and appropriate money without any thought of pay day. There is no difficulty in this proposal at all which the Congress cannot overcome.

I think our present policy of having deficits without any provision as to how they are to be paid could conceivably, if carried over a longer period of years than our recent depression happened to last, bring the country to a very serious crisis, whereas if we had provided in making these huge outlays a gradual system of taxation which would eventually overtake the appropriations and liquidate them, we would have forestalled possible trouble. Who knew that the depression would begin to subside when it did commence to do so? Who could say that it would not run for 20 years? Is there a Senator in this body who will assume for a moment that we could for a period of 20 years have kept the pace we had set at one time? Is it not wise to protect the credit of the Government, to look forward to the day when difficulties which cannot be foreseen shall arise rather than to say, "Oh, well, we got out of the last depression and that old system is good enough"? Who knows, with the condition in which the world is, what the future has in store?

I say it will be a good day when the Congress cannot appropriate more money than is available from the income of the Government without providing the means to make up the excess appropriations either through a bond issue, to be liquidated gradually, or by new taxation levied simultaneously with the excess appropriations.

If a war should break out in Europe tomorrow and sweep over and engulf the whole world, closing down our foreign trade, taking away the markets from our people, and relief should become a necessity or our policy of neutrality should fail, are we to have no checks and no balances at all on governmental finances? Are we to assume, because we are rich and blessed, there is no top and no bottom to the largesses of Congress? No man would agree to that for a moment, for, as the old colored woman told the lawyer, she would pay him $100 as soon as she got out of jail and then forgot to pay it, so it is with people who are in distress; so it is with our country.

Having passed through a depression, do we think one will never come again? It is just as sure to come again as the sun is to rise and set. I care not whether Democrats or Republicans run the Government for the next 100 years, because there are certain forces and events in mankind's experiences which no government can foresee or guard against. The elements themselves may create an unfavorable condition, foreign countries may create such a condition, and the government is wise which runs its business so that, so far as human ingenuity can foresee, no crisis shall arise which it is not prepared to meet.

My thought is that the Government receipts ought to be estimated as a whole and allocated among the respective departments in accordance with the needs of the Nation. If those receipts are not great enough and more money has to be appropriated for emergent items, then either immediate new taxes should be levied to raise the additional amount or, if the money is borrowed, a more gradual system of taxation with which to pay interest and provide amortization should be set up, so that the Government would always be conducting its business on a sound basis, and the needy and the distressed, the agriculturists or labor or industry that might need aid, would always find the Government's credit stable and able to provide it.

This system has been in vogue in my own State for many decades. It has worked admirably. I do not believe any student of finance or economics will say that at present the best business administration surrounds the appropriation of public money. Certainly we appropriate and postpone the day of taxation. Sometime we might postpone it too long when returning conditions of prosperity are too long delayed, and then we would find a capital levy or almost confiscatory taxes our only alternative.

We cannot destroy wealth twice. We can only destroy it once. Therefore it is my thought, now the worst of the depression is behind us and we have emerged from this dark period, that it is the time to put our finances in such shape that when another one shall come we shall be in a stronger position to weather the storm and carry the Government's financial credit and position to a safe harbor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Maryland if he will permit me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to yield, although I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I do not wish to transgress further on the time of the Senate because I think the leader on our side has some business he wishes to have transacted.

Mr. ADAMS. The matter is of some very considerable importance. I happen to come also from a State which has in its constitution and in its laws the same fiscal policies that Maryland has adopted. I am familiar with a plan very similar to that which the Senator from Maryland submits in reference to our local State government, our cities, and our counties. They apply the budget system and an estimate of revenues. In the State of Colorado the legislature is limited by constitutional provision to the effect that an appropriation in excess of revenue is void. In other words, in my State we cannot appropriate money validly in excess of income.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is also true of Maryland.

Mr. ADAMS. The thought I wanted to suggest, following the line of suggestion made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and also the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], is how could we make the plan binding and effective, assuming it to be sound.

The Senator starts with an estimate; that is, he proposes to bind Congress by the estimates of revenues to be made by the executive department. That is the premise. Of course, that is not binding upon the Congress. It would be a matter of Congress in good faith following the suggestion. If Congress should now adopt the Budget, and at a subsequent day should make an appropriation in excess of that Budget, it would be exercising authority which legally would supersede the prior statute.

My question is whether it is not necessary, if we are to put the plan in effective operation, to do so not by statute but by a constitutional provision?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator's suggestion is one that may well be considered in connection with the joint resolution.

I shall conclude what I have to say by restating that I realize the plan I have here proposed is not perhaps the plan which would evolve out of the committee hearings. I do believe it is a basis for proper consideration, and that such consideration would bring forth a workable plan of great benefit to the people and the Government.

I now introduce the joint resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and referred as indicated.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 36) to provide for a balanced Budget was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 8)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

I address this message to the Congress as one who has had experience as a legislator, as a subordinate in an executive department, as the chief executive of a State, and as one on whom, as President, the constitutional responsibility for the whole of the executive branch of the Government has lain for 4 years.

Now that we are out of the trough of the depression, the time has come to set our house in order. The administrative management of the Government needs overhauling. We are confronted not alone by new activities, some of them temporary in character, but also by the growth of the work of the Government matching the growth of the Nation over more than a generation.

Except for the enactment of the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, no extensive change in management has occurred since 1913, when the Department of Labor was established. The executive structure of the Government is sadly out of date. I am not the first President to report to the Congress that antiquated machinery stands in the way of effective administration and of adequate control by the Congress. Theodore Roosevelt, William H. Taft, Woodrow Wilson, and Herbert Hoover made repeated but not wholly successful efforts to deal with the problem. Committees of the Congress have also rendered distinguished service to the Nation through their efforts from time to time to point the way to improvement of governmental management and organization.

The opportunity and the need for action now comes to you and to me. If we have faith in our republican form of government and in the ideals upon which it has rested for 150 years, we must devote ourselves energetically and courageously to the task of making that government efficient. The great stake in efficient democracy is the stake of the common man.

In these troubled years of world history a self-government cannot long survive unless that government is an effective and efficient agency to serve mankind and carry out the will of the Nation. A government without good management is a house builded on sand.

In striving together to make our Government more efficient, you and I are taking up in our generation the battle to preserve that freedom of self-government which our forefathers fought to establish and hand down to us. They struggled against tyranny, against nonrepresentative controls, against government by birth, wealth, or class against sectionalism. Our struggle now is against confusion, against ineffectiveness, against waste, against inefficiency. This battle, too, must be won, unless it is to be said that in our generation national self-government broke down and was frittered away in bad management.

Will it be said "democracy was a great dream but it could not do the job"? Or shall we here and now, without further delay, make it our business to see that our American democracy is made efficient so that it will do the job that is required of it by the events of our time?

I know your answer, and the answer of the Nation, because, after all, we are a practical people. We know good management in the home, on the farm, and in business, big and little. If any nation can find the way to effective government, it should be the American people through their own democratic institutions.

Over a year ago it seemed to me that this problem of administrative management of the executive branch of the Government should be a major order of business of this session of the Congress. Accordingly, after extended discussions and negotiations, I appointed a Committee on Administrative Management to examine the whole problem broadly and to suggest for my guidance and your consideration a comprehensive and balanced program for dealing with the overhead organization and management of the executive branch as it is established under the Constitution.

The Committee has now completed its work, and I transmit to you its report, "Administrative Management in the Government of the United States." I have examined this report carefully and thoughtfully, and am convinced that it is a great document of permanent importance. I think that the general program presented by the Committee is adequate, reasonable, and practical, and that it furnishes the basis for immediate action. The broad facts are known; the need is clear; what is now required is action.

The Committee on Administrative Management points out that no enterprise can operate effectively if set up as is the Government today. There are over 100 separate departments, boards, commissions, corporations, authorities, agencies, and activities through which the work of the Government is being carried on. Neither the President nor the Congress can exercise effective supervision and direction over such a chaos of establishments, nor can overlapping, duplication, and contradictory policies be avoided.

The Committee has not spared me; it says, what has been common knowledge for 20 years, that the President cannot adequately handle his responsibilities; that he is overworked; that it is humanly impossible, under the system which we have, for him fully to carry out his constitutional duty as Chief Executive because he is overwhelmed with minor details and needless contacts arising directly from the bad organization and equipment of the Government. I can testify to this. With my predecessors, who have said the same thing over and over again, I plead guilty.

The plain fact is that the present organization and equipment of the executive branch of the Government defeats the constitutional intent that there be a single responsible Chief Executive to coordinate and manage the departments and activities in accordance with the laws enacted by the Congress. Under these conditions the Government cannot be thoroughly effective in working, under popular control, for the common good.

The committee does not spare the Comptroller General for his failure to give the Congress a prompt and complete audit each year, totally independent of administration, as a means of holding the Executive truly to account; nor for his unconstitutional assumption of executive power; nor for the failure to keep the accounting system of the Government up to date to serve as the basis of information, management, and control.

The Committee criticizes the use of boards and commissions in administration, condemns the careless use of "corporations" as governmental instrumentalities, and points out that the practice of creating independent regulatory commissions, who perform administrative work in addition to judicial work, threatens to develop a "fourth branch" of the Government, for which there is no sanction in the Constitution. Nor does the Committee spare the inadequacy of the civil-service system.

To meet this situation and bring our administrative management up to date the Committee presents an integrated five-point program, which you will find set out in its report. It includes these major recommendations:

First. Expand the White House staff so that the President may have a sufficient group of able assistants in his own office to keep him in closer and easier touch with the widespread affairs of administration, and to make the speedier clearance of the knowledge needed for Executive decision.

Second. Strengthen and develop the managerial agencies of the Government, particularly those dealing with the Budget and efficiency research, with personnel and with planning, as management arms of the Chief Executive.

Third. Extend the merit system upward, outward, and downward to cover practically all non-policy-determining posts; reorganize the civil-service system as a part of management under a single, responsible administrator; and create a citizen board to serve as the watchdog of the merit system, and increase the salaries of key posts throughout the service so that the Government may attract and hold in a career service men and women of ability and character.

Fourth. Overhaul the 100 independent agencies, administrations, authorities, boards, and commissions, and place them by Executive order within one or the other of the following 12 major executive departments: State, Treasury, War, Justice, Post Office, Navy, Conservation, Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, Social Welfare, and Public Works; and place upon the Executive continuing responsibility for the maintenance of effective organization.

Fifth. Establish accountability of the Executive to the Congress by providing a genuine independent post-audit of all fiscal transactions by an auditor general, and restore to the Executive complete responsibility for accounts and current transactions.

As you will see, this program rests solidly upon the Constitution and upon the American way of doing things. There is nothing in it which is revolutionary, as every element is drawn from our own experience, either in government or large-scale business.

I endorse this program and feel confident that it will commend itself to you also with your knowledge of government, and to the vast majority of the citizens of the country who want and believe in efficient self-government.

No important advance can be made toward the major objectives of the program without the passage by the Congress of the necessary legislation.

It will be necessary to provide for the establishment of two new departments, a department of social welfare and a department of public works, for the assignment by the President of all the miscellaneous activities to the 12 major departments thus provided, for reorganization of the civil-service system, for modernizing and strengthening the managerial agencies of the Executive, and for making the Executive more strictly accountable to the Congress. By the creation of two new departments nearly 100 agencies now not under regular departments can be consolidated as to their administrative functions under a total of 12 regular departments of the Government.

The remaining elements of the five-point program, though they must await your action on the basic legislation, may be initiated through appropriations and Executive orders.

In placing this program before you I realize that it will be said that I am recommending the increase of the powers of the Presidency. This is not true. The Presidency as established in the Constitution of the United States has all of the powers that are required. In spite of timid souls in 1787 who feared effective Government the Presidency was established as a single strong chief executive office in which was vested the entire executive power of the National Government, even as the legislative power was placed in the Congress and the judicial in the Supreme Court. What I am placing before you is not the request for more power, but for the tools of management and the authority to distribute the work so that the President can effectively discharge those powers which the Constitution now places upon him. Unless we are prepared to abandon this important part of the Constitution, we must equip the Presidency with authority commensurate with his responsibilities under the Constitution.

The Committee on Administrative Management, after a careful examination of recent attempts to reorganize the Government and of State reorganizations carried out so ably by Gov. Frank O. Lowden in Illinois, Gov. Alfred E. Smith in New York, Gov. Harry F. Byrd in Virginia, Gov. William Tudor Gardiner in Maine, and by other Governors, accepts the view held by my distinguished predecessors that the detailed work of reorganization is, as President Theodore Roosevelt said over 30 years ago, "essentially executive in its nature." The Committee accordingly recommends that reorganization should be a continuing duty and authority of the Chief Executive on the basis of standards set by the Congress. To make this safe, the Committee insists, however, that the Congress keep a watchful eye upon reorganization both through the annual Budget and through the maintenance of strict executive accountability to the Congress under the independent audit of all financial transactions by an auditor general. Under the proposed plan the Congress must by law establish the major departments and determine in advance the general principles which shall guide the President in distributing the work of the Government among these departments, and in this task the President is to act on the basis of careful research by the Bureau of the Budget and after conference with those primarily affected. Reorganization is not a mechanical task, but a human task, because Government is not a machine, but a living organism. With these clear safeguards, and in view of our past muddling with reorganization, one cannot but accept the logic and wisdom of the recommendations.

I would not have you adopt this five-point program, however, without realizing that this represents an important step in American history. If we do this, we reduce from over 100 down to a dozen the operating executive agencies of the Government, and we bring many little bureaucracies under broad coordinated democratic authority.

But in so doing we shall know that we are going back to the Constitution and giving to the executive branch modern tools of management and an up-to-date organization which will enable the Government to go forward efficiently. We can prove to the world that American government is both democratic and effective.

In this program I invite your cooperation and pledge myself to deal energetically and promptly with the executive responsibilities of reorganization and administrative management when you shall have made this possible by the necessary legislation.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 12, 1937.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the President's message, and the accompanying report of the President's Committee on Administrative Management in the Executive Branch of the Government of the United States, be printed as a public document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the message and the accompanying report will lie on the table.

EXEMPTION FROM TAX OF INAUGURAL ADMISSION TICKETS

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate for reading House Joint Resolution 106.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 106) to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies of the Inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937, said committee to be appointed with the approval of the President-elect, shall be exempt from the tax on admissions imposed by section 500 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, all the net proceeds from the sale of said tickets to be donated by the said committee to charity.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few days ago Senate Joint Resolution 18 was passed by the Senate. The measure which has today come over from the House is textually the same as the Senate joint resolution. I move that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the House joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Leighton Shields, of Missouri (now serving under a recess appointment), to be district attorney, United States Court for China, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(For nomination this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, January 14, 1937, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate January 12, 1937

DISTRICT ATTORNEY, UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA

Leighton Shields to be district attorney for the United States Court for China. (Mr. Shields is now serving under a recess appointment.)

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 12, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Father, whose love and mercy reach to all men, arm us with that faith which enriches and dignifies life and fills it with the momentum of a great purpose. We are glad for the quiet of another night; today may we show forth Thy thought, power, and beauty; let Thy justice and goodness possess us. Almighty God, we hear the clanging discords of men throughout our land. We earnestly pray Thee that the higher and more blessed unity of our Lord may prevail among them. Grant that wisdom, steady, serious, and tranquil, may beat a pathway through the tides of controversy and that understanding and mutual good will may merge strong and enduring on the side of brotherhood. Hear our prayer, O Lord, for Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 591. An act granting a pension to Grace G. Coolidge.

GRACE G. COOLIDGE

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 591) granting a pension to Grace G. Coolidge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 591), as follows:

An act granting a pension to Grace G. Coolidge

Be it enacted, etc., That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to place on the pension rolls the name of Grace G. Coolidge, widow of Calvin Coolidge, late a President of the United States, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXEMPTING FROM TAX ADMISSIONS PAID FOR TICKETS TO INAUGURAL CEREMONIES

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina submits a resolution, which the Clerk will report, and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 106

Joint resolution to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937

Resolved, etc., That all amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937, said committee to be appointed with the approval of the President-elect, shall be exempt from the tax on admissions imposed by section 500 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, all the net proceeds from the sale of said tickets to be donated by the said committee to charity.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question? I would like to know from the chairman if it is going to be the practice of this Congress to put through legislation for tax-exempt securities? If it is not, then we better start here to object. I give notice now that I shall object to all legislation for tax-exempt securities, but because of the fact that this might seem to be a political objection because it relates to the inaugural ceremonies I do not want to do it. However, I do want to notify the majority leader of this House that I am going to object in every way I possibly can to the issuance of any more tax-exempt securities. I will permit this resolution to pass, but I would like an expression from the leader of the majority upon this matter.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks me what the practice and policy of the House is going to be. Of course, I do not know. I do not know what the policy of the committee will be. But this has no relation whatever to tax-exempt securities. As far as I am personally concerned I have never believed in tax-exempt securities, but as I say this has no relation whatever to tax-exempt securities.

Mr. RICH. I want to say that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has more influence in the House than any other Member. He has stated that he is opposed to tax-exempt securities, and I want to say that I will help him in every way that I can to prohibit the issuing of any more by this Government. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion by Mr. DOUGHTON to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to inform the majority Members of the House that there will be a Democratic caucus at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning to hear a report of the majority committee on committees.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next my colleague, Mr. LUCE, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately after the special order today I be granted permission to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that after the disposition of the special order today he may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a report of the mayors of certain cities of the United States to the President of the United States in reference to relief.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a short article on the Constitution by Mr. Fred Wilson, of Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a short article on the Constitution by Fred Wilson, of Tennessee. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to inquire who Mr. Fred Wilson is?

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Fred Wilson lives in Tennessee, and this is just a short article on the Constitution written by him. He has written a book on the Constitution.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, to allow this would be contrary to the rules of the Joint Committee on Printing, and I shall have to object. I object.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement I made to the Secretary of Agriculture on crop conditions in the Third Congressional District of the State of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Speaker. I may say to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] that the President's message is coming and we are waiting for it now. I think it will be here in 10 or 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess, subject to the call of the Speaker.

AFTER THE RECESS

At 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m., the House was called to order by the Speaker.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 8)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I address this message to the Congress as one who has had experience as a legislator, as a subordinate in an executive department, as the chief executive of a State, and as one on whom, as President, the constitutional responsibility for the whole of the executive branch of the Government has lain for 4 years.

I know your answer, and the answer of the Nation, because, after all, we are a practical people. We know good management in the home, on the farm, and in business, big and little. If any nation can find the way to effective government, it should be the American people through their own democratic institutions.

Over a year ago it seemed to me that this problem of administrative management of the executive branch of the Government should be a major order of business of this session of the Congress. Accordingly, after extended discussions and negotiations, I appointed a Committee on Administrative Management to examine the whole problem broadly and to suggest for my guidance and your consideration a comprehensive and balanced program for dealing with the overhead organization and management of the executive branch as it is established under the Constitution.

The Committee has now completed its work, and I transmit to you its report, "Administrative Management in the Government of the United States." I have examined this report carefully and thoughtfully and am convinced that it is a great document of permanent importance. I think that the general program presented by the committee is adequate, reasonable, and practical, and that it furnishes the basis for immediate action. The broad facts are known; the need is clear; what is now required is action.

The Committee on Administrative Management points out that no enterprise can operate effectively if set up as is the Government today. There are over 100 separate departments, boards, commissions, corporations, authorities, agencies, and activities through which the work of the Government is being carried on. Neither the President nor the Congress can exercise effective supervision and direction over such a chaos of establishments, nor can overlapping, duplication, and contradictory policies be avoided.

The Committee has not spared me; it says, what has been common knowledge for 20 years, that the President cannot adequately handle his responsibilities; that he is overworked, that it is humanly impossible, under the system which we have, for him fully to carry out his constitutional duty as Chief Executive because he is overwhelmed with minor details and needless contacts arising directly from the bad organization and equipment of the Government. I can testify to this. With my predecessors who have said the same thing over and over again, I plead guilty.

The plain fact is that the present organization and equipment of the executive branch of the Government defeats the constitutional intent that there be a single responsible Chief Executive to coordinate and manage the departments and activities in accordance with the laws enacted by the Congress. Under these conditions the Government cannot be thoroughly effective in working, under popular control, for the common good.

The Committee does not spare the Comptroller General for his failure to give the Congress a prompt and complete audit each year, totally independent of administration, as a means of holding the Executive truly to account; nor for his unconstitutional assumption of executive power; nor for the failure to keep the accounting system of the Government up to date to serve as the basis of information, management, and control.

The Committee criticizes the use of boards and commissions in administration, condemns the careless use of "corporations" as governmental instrumentalities, and points out that the practice of creating independent regulatory commissions, who perform administrative work in addition to judicial work, threatens to develop a "fourth branch" of the Government for which there is no sanction in the Constitution. Nor does the Committee spare the inadequacy of the civil-service system.

To meet this situation and bring our administrative management up to date, the Committee presents an integrated five-point program which you will find set out in its report. It includes these major recommendations:

First. Expand the White House staff so that the President may have a sufficient group of able assistants in his own office to keep him in closer and easier touch with the widespread affairs of administration, and to make the speedier clearance of the knowledge needed for executive decision.

Second. Strengthen and develop the managerial agencies of the Government, particularly those dealing with the Budget and efficiency research, with personnel and with planning, as management arms of the Chief Executive.

Third. Extend the merit system upward, outward, and downward to cover practically all non-policy-determining posts; reorganize the civil-service system as a part of management under a single responsible administrator, and create a citizen board to serve as the watchdog of the merit system and increase the salaries of key posts throughout the service, so that the Government may attract and hold in a career service men and women of ability and character.

Fourth. Overhaul the 100 independent agencies, administrations, authorities, boards, and commissions and place them by Executive order within one or the other of the following 12 major executive departments: State, Treasury, War, Justice, Post Office, Navy, Conservation, Agriculture, Commerce, Labor, Social Welfare, and Public Works, and place upon the Executive continuing responsibility for the maintenance of effective organization.

Fifth. Establish accountability of the Executive to the Congress by providing a genuine independent post-audit of all fiscal transactions by an auditor general, and restore to the Executive complete responsibility for accounts and current transactions.

As you will see, this program rests solidly upon the Constitution and upon the American way of doing things. There is nothing in it which is revolutionary, as every element is drawn from our own experience either in Government or large-scale business.

I endorse this program and feel confident that it will commend itself to you also, with your knowledge of Government, and to the vast majority of the citizens of the country, who want and believe in efficient self-government.

No important advance can be made toward the major objectives of the program without the passage by the Congress of the necessary legislation.

It will be necessary to provide for the establishment of two new departments, a department of social welfare and a department of public works, for the assignment by the President of all the miscellaneous activities to the 12 major departments thus provided, for reorganization of the civil-service system, for modernizing and strengthening the managerial agencies of the Executive, and for making the Executive more strictly accountable to the Congress. By the creation of two new departments nearly 100 agencies now not under regular departments can be consolidated as to their administrative functions under a total of 12 regular departments of the Government.

The remaining elements of the five-point program, though they must await your action on the basic legislation, may be initiated through appropriations and Executive orders.

In placing this program before you I realize that it will be said that I am recommending the increase of the powers of the Presidency. This is not true. The Presidency as established in the Constitution of the United States has all of the powers that are required. In spite of timid souls in 1737 who feared effective Government, the Presidency was established as a single strong Chief Executive office in which was vested the entire executive power of the National Government, even as the legislative power was placed in the Congress and the judicial in the Supreme Court. What I am placing before you is not the request for more power, but for the tools of management and the authority to distribute the work so that the President can effectively discharge those powers which the Constitution now places upon him. Unless we are prepared to abandon this important part of the Constitution, we must equip the Presidency with authority commensurate with his responsibilities under the Constitution.

The Committee on Administrative Management, after a careful examination of recent attempts to reorganize the Government and of State reorganizations carried out so ably by Gov. Frank O. Lowden in Illinois, Gov. Alfred E. Smith in New York, Gov. Harry F. Byrd in Virginia, Gov.

William Tudor Gardiner in Maine, and by other Governors, accepts the view held by my distinguished predecessors that the detailed work of reorganization is, as President Theodore Roosevelt said over 30 years ago, "essentially executive in its nature." The Committee accordingly recommends that reorganization should be a continuing duty and authority of the Chief Executive on the basis of standards set by the Congress. To make this safe, the Committee insists, however, that the Congress keep a watchful eye upon reorganization both through the annual Budget and through the maintenance of strict executive accountability to the Congress under the independent audit of all financial transactions by an auditor general. Under the proposed plan, the Congress must by law establish the major departments and determine in advance the general principles which shall guide the President in distributing the work of the Government among these departments, and in this task the President is to act on the basis of careful research by the Bureau of the Budget and after conference with those primarily affected. Reorganization is not a mechanical task but a human task, because government is not a machine but a living organism. With these clear safeguards and in view of our past muddling with reorganization, one cannot but accept the logic and wisdom of the recommendations.

I would not have you adopt this five-point program, however, without realizing that this represents an important step in American history. If we do this, we reduce from over 100 down to a dozen the operating executive agencies of the Government, and we bring many little bureaucracies under broad coordinated democratic authority.

But in so doing we shall know that we are going back to the Constitution and giving to the executive branch modern tools of management and an up-to-date organization which will enable the Government to go forward efficiently. We can prove to the world that American government is both democratic and effective.

In this program I invite your cooperation and pledge myself to deal energetically and promptly with the executive responsibilities of reorganization and administrative management when you shall have made this possible by the necessary legislation.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

PERMANENT DISTRIBUTION OF NATIONAL PRODUCTION

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I am today discussing H. R. 31, introduced by me on January 5, 1937. I introduced an identic bill on August 22, 1935, H. R. 9216, Seventy-fourth Congress, upon which hearings were held before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives on April 27 and 28, 1936, which hearings are entitled "Permanent Distribution of National Production."

Later in these remarks I will attempt to explain the bill, but what I intend as a graphic background will perhaps assist the explanation.

In a speech made at the annual dinner of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, on November 19, 1936, President James Roland Angell, of Yale University, is quoted by the New York Times, of November 20, as follows:

> The gravest danger with which we are confronted is the possible lack of sufficient moral insight to recognize that, if we wish to salvage the high and indubitable advantages of a free democracy, we must breed a sufficiently vivid form of intelligent social altruism voluntarily to forego some of the individual prerogatives which in a simpler day we could properly and successfully claim.

He said that if the good things of life cannot be distributed with reasonable justice and with due regard to the social service actually rendered, and if needless cruelty cannot be prevented, then—

> I say again we may look for some form of dictatorial control and with its coming the destruction of many of the highest spiritual values in life.

He said that, being an optimist, he had no doubt ways would be discovered to do full justice to the social and economic necessities of the people without crushing individual initiative and self-reliance.

Mr. Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the board of directors of the Chase National Bank, spoke at the same dinner, and is quoted as follows by the Times:

> In my opinion the underlying factor was the widespread belief that the existing administration was pledged to protect those among us who are the least able to protect themselves.
> If my estimate is correct, the election of 2 weeks ago was an American reflection of a world-wide movement that the war and its consequences greatly stimulated—the movement yielding up some of the individual's freedom to act in return for increased security.

We are seeing in many countries the abandonment of the philosophy that the individual has a right to go ahead as far and as fast as his capacities allow, and the substitution in place of it of the philosophy that the activities of the individual must be restrained to some extent for the benefit of all.

No man can tell for what period of time this world-wide movement will go or what further changes it will produce in the economic, social, and political world as we know it. It is the twentieth-century's version of the philosophy of the eighteenth. It is a swing away from the intense individualism of the rights of man toward a limited application of that theory. It seeks to restrain and direct the freedom of the few for the benefit of the many.

Quoting from the New York Post of December 9, Mr. Colby M. Chester, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, at the opening session of the organization's annual meeting at the Waldorf-Astoria, said:

Industry must accept its responsibility for the national welfare as being an even higher duty than the successful operation of private business.

Mr. Chester called this the no. 1 plank in the proposed program of reform.

In a wireless from Paris, on November 5, in the New York Times, the following statement appears:

A predication that the three great democracies—France, Great Britain, and the United States—are on the verge of great prosperity but a warning that such prosperity must have wide distribution among the lower-income brackets was voiced today at a luncheon of the American Club of Paris by Sir Robert M. Kindersley, a director of the Bank of England.

"This prosperity is democracy's great opportunity," he said, "but it is also her responsibility and it is for her to see that when it comes it is fairly, equitably, and justly distributed, thus placing democracy on the broadest possible basis. * * * Otherwise prosperity cannot conceivably last except for a short time.

"If, on the other hand, we are generous and broadminded, if we have vision and see to it that a fair and just distribution takes place, the length of the prosperity which can come to the world is in my opinion immeasurable."

It seems to me especially wise and fitting to quote from the text of the annual message of the President of the United States delivered in this room on January 6. The President said:

Ours was the task to prove that democracy could be made to function in the world of today as effectively as in the simpler world of a hundred years ago. Ours was the task to do more than to argue a theory. The times required the confident answer of performance to those whose instinctive faith in humanity made them want to believe that in the long run democracy would prove superior to more extreme forms of government as a process of getting action when action was wisdom, without the spiritual sacrifices which those other forms of government exact.

That challenge we met. To meet it required unprecedented activities under Federal leadership—to end abuses—to restore a large measure of material prosperity—to give new faith to millions of our citizens who had been traditionally taught to expect that democracy would provide continuously wider opportunity and continuously greater security in a world where science was continuously making material riches more available to man.

Again he stated:

That cooperation of the past 4 years between the Congress and the President has aimed at the fulfillment of a twofold policy—first, economic recovery through many kinds of assistance to agriculture, industry, and banking; and, second, deliberate improvement in the personal security and opportunity of the great mass of our people.

And again:

Nor was the recovery we sought merely a purposeless whirring of machinery. It is important, of course, that every man and woman in the country be able to find work; that every factory run; that business as a whole earn profits. But government in a democratic nation does not exist solely, or even primarily, for that purpose.

It is not enough that the wheels turn. They must carry us in the direction of a greater satisfaction in life for the average man. The deeper purpose of democratic government is to assist as many of its citizens as possible—especially those who need it most—to improve their conditions of life, to retain all personal liberty which does not adversely affect their neighbors, and to pursue the happiness which comes with security and an opportunity for recreation and culture.

Even with our present recovery we are far from the goal of that deeper purpose. There are far-reaching problems still with us for which democracy must find solutions if it is to consider itself successful.

Evidently the leaders of thought in this country are aware of the fact that the major problem to be solved by the American people is the one of poverty in the midst of plenty; is the problem of distributing to our people all of the wanted goods and services they are able to produce. It has always seemed to me to be wise to take it for granted that there is a solution of every social problem, and that the rational process was, first, ascertaining the problem; second, ascertaining the solution; and, third, working out the solution on a practical and common sense basis, and with the facts of human nature kept constantly in mind.

The bill introduced by me is an attempt toward a solution of the indicated problem of poverty in the midst of plenty. But again, before explaining the bill, it has seemed to me best to call attention to certain facts and to quote from those, some of whom seem to understand the facts, and all of whom, in a general way, appear to understand the necessary result of the facts and some of the economic factors involved.

In 1787 John Adams wrote to Thomas Jefferson:

All the perplexities, confusion, and distress in America arise, not from defects in the Constitution or Confederation, not from want of honor or virtue, so much as from downright ignorance of the nature of coin, credit, and circulation.

Pope Pius, in Forty Years After, on the reconstruction of the social order (1931), says:

This power—

Concentrated economic domination—

becomes particularly irresistible when exercised by those who, because they hold and control money, are able also to govern credit, and determine its allotment; for that reason supplying, so to speak, the lifeblood to the entire economic body, and grasping, as it were, in their hands the very soul of production so that no one dare breathe against their will.

In 1916 President Wilson made the following statement:

A great industrial nation is controlled by its system of credit. Our system of credit is concentrated. The growth of the Nation, therefore, and all our activities are in the hands of a few men. * * * We have come to be one of the worst ruled, one of the most completely controlled and dominated governments in the civilized world—no longer a government by free opinion, no longer a government by conviction and the vote of the majority, but a government by the opinion and duress of small groups of dominant men.

Bishop McConnell, of the New York Methodist area, a former president of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, stated very recently:

Now, however, the questioning is covering a wider range and is going deeper. The issue can be put about thus: Assuming that the businessman thinks of dividends first and the public good second, and that the public thinks of its own good first and dividends second, the question is as to which point of view is to have the right-of-way. Quite likely, as in all such matters, a practical compromise is to be worked out, but the business world will do well to try to help in an adjustment. For very careful students who are not at all radical are pointing out that capitalism in the United States is sinning against its own interests in not producing more goods at reduced prices and in trying to keep wages down. Industrial leaders could take at least the first steps away from a scarcity to a plenty policy if they would do just the opposite—at least that is the opinion of those best entitled to an opinion.

All this is on the assumption that our present order can be improved within its present framework. Anyhow, the wise course for the leaders of the industrial system is to show a cooperative attitude in such matters. To be sure, there are men in this land of ours so boneheaded as not to be able to see the plain meaning of the Roosevelt reelection—the interest of the public in what concerns human welfare.

If we will take the pains to listen to comments of ordinary people, we can soon learn that there is an increasing public interest not only in social security but in such scrutiny of industrial methods as will indicate that public welfare stands where it ought to stand—in the first place.

All authorities appear to agree that we can have no permanent prosperity in this country without permanently increasing the consuming power of the masses of the people. Reading from Income and Economic Progress, a publication of the Brookings Institute, Washington, D. C., pages 37 and 38:

First, the consumptive requirements or wants of the people were far from satisfied during the period of our highest economic achievement. The value of the total national production of goods and services in 1929, if divided equally among the entire population, would have given to each person approximately $665. There were nearly 6,000,000 families with incomes less than $1,000;

12,000,000 with incomes under $1,500; over 16,000,000 with incomes under $2,000; and over 19,000,000, or 71 percent of the total, with incomes less than $2,500. A family income of $2,500, at 1929 prices, was a very moderate one, permitting few of the luxuries of life. Hence it was clear that the consumptive requirements, and especially the wants, of the masses of the people were far from satisfied.

To raise the incomes of the 19.4 million families receiving less than $2,500 in 1929 to a $2,500 level, with no changes in the incomes of the families receiving more than that amount, would have required an increase in national production of more than $16,000,000,000. A horizontal increase of $1,000 in the income of all families receiving less than $5,000 in 1929 would necessitate an expansion of production to the extent of over $25,000,000,000. To give all the families of the Nation a "reasonable standard" of living, such as is set forth in studies made by the Bureau of Home Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, would have necessitated an increase in production over 1929 levels of approximately 75 percent. The full utilization of our productive capacity, it will be recalled, would have permitted an increase in production of only about 20 percent, or $15,000,000,000. We were clearly not confronted in 1929 with overproduction, either actual or potential. The desires of the people were vastly greater than could have been satisfied by the productive power then available.

Second, the market demand for consumption goods was less than our capacity to supply such demand. That is to say, while we could not have supplied all of the goods that were desired by the people, we were able to furnish a larger volume than the people were willing or able to purchase with the incomes which they had available. A substantially greater output of consumption goods would undoubtedly have resulted had the market demands of consumers been larger.

I know the House will pardon me for making use of extensive quotations, but I am anxious, if possible, to fortify my explanation of the bill with the philosophy of others than the author of the bill.

It is, of course, obvious that these remarks contain a criticism, both express and implied, of our currency system, but they do not contain a criticism of bankers who supply it. Bankers are experts at their job, and as administrative entities the banking systems of the world are probably much superior to anything else we have—both as regards efficiency and departmental integrity.

The system of fractional reserves which makes it impossible for the people to pay their debts has no background of economic theory. It is a banking practice which originated with the Goldsmiths of London and which was perfected by the Rothschilds. In an editorial appearing in the Baltimore Evening Sun of August 19, 1935, there appears the following sentence:

Most economists agree that a nation cannot well emerge from a depression until it has written off the excessive burden of debt accumulated during the preceding period of prosperity.

This situation epitomizes the tragedy of economic life under the present monetary system.

The concept of the standardized economist is that the way to create money is by making a so-called deposit of money borrowed from a bank. In other words, you borrow from the bank, you reloan to the bank when you make a so-called deposit, and the currency of the country is created by that so-called deposit, the necessary inference being that prosperity will continue and increase until the loans made by the banks become so great that the banks become alarmed, when they proceed to collect what is due them, which in turn contracts the currency, which in turn destroys the value of property, which in turn causes universal bankruptcy and another period of depression.

As illustrating the situation we are in, let us consider for a moment the thing we call the national debt, and which is the daily pabulum of every alarmist and reactionary in the country.

Under the national debt system, which was born in England several hundred years ago, society pays for its money twice. The Government pays out money to members of society, and receives in exchange for the money either goods or services; in other words, society pays for its money when it gets it, but under the national debt system the Government—society—is required to borrow its money from the banks, and then society, which has already paid in goods and services for the money received by it, has to pay for the same money again in repaying the banks.

From the very beginning of my knowledge of business matters I have never understood the wisdom of the universal transaction of business on the basis of a debt. I read a very interesting statement made by Benjamin Disraeli. He declared that the curse of money began with King William III, who introduced in England what Disraeli termed the system of Dutch finance:

The principle (of Dutch finance) was to mortgage industry in order to protect property (money); abstractly nothing can be conceived more unjust; its practice in England has been equally injurious. It has made debt a national habit; it has made credit the ruling power, not the exceptional auxiliary, of all transactions; it has introduced a loose, inexact, haphazard, and dishonest spirit in the conduct of both public and private life; a spirit dazzling and yet dastardly; reckless of consequences and yet shrinking from responsibility. And in the end it has so overstimulated the energies of the population to maintain the material engagements of the State and of society at large that the moral condition of the people has been entirely lost sight of.

Why is it preferable to have a nation of bondholders and slaves rather than a nation of stockholders has always been entirely beyond my comprehension, and so, with all the factors implicit in these remarks, I introduced in September 1935 H. R. 9216, now H. R. 31. This bill provides for a discount to the consumer on all wanted goods sold at retail, starting with a discount of 25 percent, and providing that this discount shall be varied from time to time to a point making it possible for all the people to purchase all the people can produce. Under this bill the retailer can deposit with his bank a certificate in an amount representing the discount, which amount is placed to his credit as a deposit, the bank in turn receiving a credit on the books of a commission created by the Federal Government in an amount equal to the discount, and receiving a certificate in an equivalent amount from this Government commission, which it can use to equalize interbank balances, and which it can also use as currency in periods of emergency.

You will ask how, under such a system, inflation can be prevented. It can be prevented by the open-market operations of the Federal Reserve System; it can be prevented by the raising of the reserve requirements of all banks members of the Federal Reserve System; it can be prevented by the raising of rediscount rates in the Federal Reserve banks; it will be prevented for many years by the gradual paying off of the enormous National, State, municipal, corporate, and personal debt load of the country. As you will see, the consumer's dividend amounts to an inverted sales tax, and the bill provides that in case of necessity, to prevent inflation, the process can be reversed and a sales tax imposed. A universal sales tax is a tax on distribution, is a tax on consumption, is a starvation tax, and it will never be necessary to impose this burden upon the people, because while you may have speculation, you cannot have inflation unless and until and after your retail discount becomes so great that the people are able to consume all the wanted goods and services they can produce. Of course, if the discount were increased beyond that point you would have a rise in prices, which would be true inflation.

Now, there are other features of the bill, but I think my statement is sufficiently full to make clear the purposes of the proposed legislation.

We want to substitute cash purchases for installment purchases in every city and town and village and hamlet and rural district in this country. High-pressure salesmanship is selling to our people everything from automobiles to washing machines on the installment plan. This means that the people as a people do not have sufficient purchasing power to buy the articles so sold on an installment basis, which in turn means, of absolute mathematical necessity, that they are mortgaging not only their property but their future earning power, and it is only a question of time when they will be unable to meet their obligations, which means another national economic collapse.

On October 5, 1936, Alfred P. Sloan, Jr., president of General Motors Corporation, made the following statement in the course of a speech at Lansing, Mich.:

There will be another depression. We haven't discovered what causes them nor what will avoid them. It is inevitable that the next will be more severe than the last. Everything we have done will tend to intensify the next one.

I make no claim that the bill I am discussing will solve the problem which I have attempted to set out. It is, I believe, the only bill ever introduced into a legislative body in the world in an attempt to solve the problem of poverty in the midst of plenty by direct means. It is, I believe, the first measure ever introduced into a legislative body which involves, as a necessary implication, an economic system based on cooperation, and not, as I have said before, based on a debtor-creditor system, which necessarily involves scarcity; the first bill, insofar as I know, ever introduced involving the conception that we should all be producers of one kind or another, and that debt should be the occasional incident rather than the necessary accompaniment and dominant feature of our economic life. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). Under the special order, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] was granted permission to address the House for 30 minutes. The gentleman from Wisconsin has informed the Chair that if he were not present in the Chamber at this time he did not desire to speak. The Chair does not see the gentleman from Wisconsin.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, if no one desires to make any further remarks, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 13, 1937, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 13, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord God is a sun and shield: the Lord will give grace and glory: no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly.

Heavenly Father, we pray that this living truth may defy our doubts, break through our prejudices, and triumph over our fears. Enfold us with a sense of Thy nearness and let Thy spirit give insight of mind and tranquillity of soul. Only as we submit ourselves to Thy direction do our highest possibilities show forth the wisest decisions. Inspire us to do the right as we know the right and defend the truth as we know the truth. O Divine Love, Thou art never far from us. Come to those who are ill, answer their need in tenderness, and bless them with a wealth of strength and with a richer wealth of love. In every crisis may we keep our anchorage to Thee unbroken. In our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 106. Joint resolution to exempt from the tax on admissions amounts paid for admission tickets sold by authority of the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect in January 1937.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to the authority conferred upon the Speaker by House Resolution 39, Seventy-fifth Congress, the Chair appoints Hon. William E. Thorpe, county judge of Greene County, N. Y., to administer the oath of office to Hon. PHILIP ARNOLD GOODWIN at Coxsackie, N. Y.

PERMISSION TO FILE REPORT

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Rules may have until midnight tonight to file perhaps three reports.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from New York inform us to what legislation these reports will relate?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. They pertain, if the Rules Committee reports, to the matters contained in the President's message of yesterday as to the reorganization of the Government.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Is there any particular reason for asking that we have until midnight tonight to put in our report? Why could we not bring it in tomorrow? What is the reason?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. We might want to act on it tomorrow and it would have to lay over for 1 day.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean that he is going to force the entire reorganization program through immediately without any consideration in this House?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, no; nothing like that at all. Any reports from the Committee on Rules would pertain to how the matter would be handled by committees, or similar set-ups.

Mr. SNELL. But the gentleman does not expect to bring the legislation in here immediately?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question: Will the gentleman call to the attention of the Members of the House the letter appearing in yesterday's RECORD written by Senator GLASS in reference to a radio speech by Senator BYRD in reference to reorganization? If the Members of the House of Representatives will read that letter of the Senator they will find it a mighty fine letter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will suspend a moment.

The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the rules of the House which forbid reference being made on the floor of the House to the activities of the Members of the Senate.

Does the gentleman object to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I asked the chairman of the Committee on Rules a question, and he recognized me. I wanted him to call to the attention of the Members of the House the letter of the Senator from Virginia.

The SPEAKER. In the first place, the Chair does not think the gentleman has submitted a parliamentary inquiry. In the second place, the gentleman from New York would not be entitled to reply to a question which violated the rules of the House.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Do I understand I am not permitted to say anything in reference to any Senator or what he has said? Is this the ruling of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will read the rules he will find they prohibit any reference on the floor to votes or statements made upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. When a speech made by a Member of the other body appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is it possible that no reference can be made thereto in debate on the floor of this House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule in reply to the gentleman's inquiry.

It is a breach of order in debate to notice what has been said on the same subject in the other House, or the particular votes or majorities on it there; because the opinion of each House should be left to its own independency, not to be influenced by the proceedings of the other; and the quoting them might beget reflections leading to a misunderstanding between the two Houses.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it, if the gentleman from New York will yield for that purpose.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield, but I do not, of course, answer parliamentary inquiries. The Chair does that.

Mr. GIFFORD. I thank the gentleman for yielding. I wanted to propound to the Chair, if I might, this inquiry: The address to which I referred, as I understand it, was made over the radio and not in the other body itself. Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious about this, because in my remarks on tomorrow I had wanted to refer to that speech made over the radio. I am very anxious to know if I am to be ruled out of order in referring to this speech of the Senator made over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his inquiry?

Mr. GIFFORD. In my address of tomorrow I had thought of making reference to the speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD made by the Senator over the radio. I ask the Chair if the Chair will consider this to be out of order?

The SPEAKER. If objection is made to it—and the Chair thinks it will probably be the duty of the Chair to make objection—the gentleman cannot do so, because according to the precedents, reference cannot be made to the proceedings in the Senate and speeches of Senators.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Rules Committee will meet at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a short announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, there will be a meeting of the Republican members of the committee on committees at 4 o'clock this afternoon in the rooms of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, located in the New House Office Building, and there will be a Republican conference in this Hall at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SABATH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names in the resolution be dispensed with and that the names be printed in the RECORD. It is simply a list of the majority members of the various committees.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman state to the House these are merely the names of the majority members?

Mr. RAYBURN. There are also assigned the so-called Progressive Members.

Mr. BOILEAU. The Members of the Farmer-Labor and Progressive Parties are included in there?

Mr. RAYBURN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition in opposition to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] is recognized.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, have I 1 hour to speak in opposition to this resolution?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] relinquishes the floor, the gentleman is entitled to an hour.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I have authority to yield part of this time to others who may desire to speak on this matter without losing my right to use the full 1 hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman may yield part of his time.

Mr. BOILEAU. Without asking unanimous consent of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion the gentleman may do that without asking consent of the House.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday I asked for and was granted unanimous consent to address the House for 30 minutes. At that time I had intended to address myself to the subject of committee assignments for the Farmer-Labor and Progressive Members of the House of Representatives.

I had received word, entirely unofficially, that the majority committee on committees, consisting of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, had made the assignments to the various committees covering the majority Members of the House, and that the question had been decided by the Democratic committee on committees as to the number and importance of committees to which the Farmer-Labor and Progressive Members of the House were to be assigned. After I had received that notice I thought it was the proper thing to notify the Democratic chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who is also chairman of the Democratic committee on committees, that I intended to address the House on this particular subject. I felt that he and other members of the committee should know that we, the Farmer-Labor and Progressive Members, were entirely dissatisfied with the treatment accorded us, not only in the matter of committee assignments but also in a slight degree we were dissatisfied because we had not had adequate opportunity to present our request to the committee on committees with reference to individual assignments.

Mr. Speaker, I realize I am talking now in opposition to the assignment of the majority Members of this House, but the only thing I can do is to appeal to the sense of fairness of the Democratic majority in this House. I know that each and every one on the majority side has had an opportunity to express preference as to the committee assignments, and I am conscious also of the fact that having had this opportunity to mention the first choice, and probably the second or third choice, through your representatives on the committee on committees, you have had an opportunity to work out your committee assignments, and in all probability the vast majority of the Members on the majority side are quite well satisfied with their committee assignments. I realize that when there is a vote taken on this resolution there will be the natural inclination on your part to vote for it; therefore the only appeal I can hope to make is that you disregard your own committee assignments and attempt to deal fairly with the other Members of this House who represent a constituency the same as you do. These other Members of the House are elected in the same manner you are, and under our Constitution they have just as much right in the House of Representatives, just as many prerogatives, and just as many rights as Members of the House as any individual on the majority side.

I know that on tomorrow, or in the near future, the distinguished Republican leader will present a resolution providing for election of Republican Members of various committees. It will then be too late for me to oppose the resolution because if we are to be treated fairly, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to defeat the pending resolution at the present time. For all practical purposes it will be necessary to do that because after the pending resolution is adopted the question will be virtually settled.

We of the Farmer-Labor and Progressive group in this House number 13, and we demand that we be considered for all intents and purposes as a minority group. In no sense of the word can we ever be considered as a majority group. The precedents of the House are clear on that subject. It has been established over a long period of years that those Members with political designations other than the two dominant parties—in our instance the third party or fourth party, the Farmer-Labor-Progressive Members, or the so-called third party Members of the House—have received their appointments from the Members of the majority party.

This is probably as it should be. We prefer to have a definite bloc of committees assigned to us, but we are not pressing that issue now. We are asking for proper recognition on the committees, and it has been the traditional policy of the Congress from the very beginning that the dominant or the majority party—in this case the Democrats—should make assignments to the third party men in the resolution electing the majority Members. There is a very good reason for this, and I do not mean to infer in the slightest, I may say to the Republican leader and the members of the Republican Party, that we would not be given proper treatment if the Republicans were to give us our assignments. I do not mean to suggest that at all, but from the standpoint of good government and good parliamentary procedure it is proper that those who are in this more or less small minority should be protected by the majority group. This is obvious.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I should prefer to go along a little further and then I should be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

It is good parliamentary procedure that the Democrats in this instance should give us our assignments, but we do maintain that our assignments should come out of the assignments set aside for minority Members.

Mr. Speaker, we are in accord and accept the proposition that the Democrats should assign our Members to committees in a resolution such as you have offered today, but we demand that in the consideration of this subject and in the assignment of committees we should, in every sense of the word, be considered as a minority group, and we want to emphasize the fact that our assignments as committee members of the House should be taken out of the quota that the precedents and the rules set aside for minority Members. We should have our assignments out of the bloc of assignments that go to the minority because we are minority Members of the House.

There is nothing in the rules of the House that provides that such assignments should be divided between Democrats and Republicans. All the rules and all the precedents are that the assignments should be made as among the majority on the one hand and among the minority Members on the other, and I submit to you that as minority Members of the House—and this is the crux of our entire argument and I hope you will get this point—we are entitled to be given just the same consideration as is given to other minority Members of the House. In other words, we should be given as much consideration, in proportion to our percentage of the minority Members of the House, as the Republicans or any other group of minority Members in this body. If we are to be given what I consider fair treatment, or if we are to be given our fair proportion of majority and minority committees, obviously we will have more assignments than you Democrats will have, because today the Republican Members of the House, as in the last Congress, have much better committee assignments than you gentleman of the majority. I think probably this is as it should be, because it is necessary to have a minority that can express the minority views. It is necessary that we have a sufficient number of minority Members on committees so that all matters will be fairly considered from all angles. So if we are to be given consideration as minority Members and given our fair share of representation on the major and minor committees, I want to be very frank to you and say that we would probably have better committee assignments than you Democrats, but I may also say that this does not mean that we would have better committee assignments than other minority parties, and if we are minority Members of the House, we are entitled, not only according to what is right and wrong, but based upon "the rules of the game", to fair representation on the major committees of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman claim that the Progressives in this House are a national minority party?

Mr. BOILEAU. I will answer that question. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that neither he nor any other Democrat, so far as I can recollect, raised that question last November in Wisconsin and Minnesota.

I will answer your question very completely and I will say to the gentleman that there is a liberal movement in this country that may, in not so many years, have some of you coming to us for assignment as minority Members of this House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes; certainly.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman was given an opportunity to express his views before we ever began the hearings.

Mr. BOILEAU. I wish to say we had an opportunity to appear before the committee, but there never was any opportunity afforded us until after the committee assignments were made to suggest our preference of committees. If you will permit me, I will make a statement which I consider to be fair, and the gentleman will agree to the facts, I am sure. I wish to say that upon my request the chairman of the committee very kindly and very courteously gave my colleague [Mr. WITHROW] and myself an opportunity to come before his committee. We expressed our view. We stated that we believed we should have a fair proportion of committee assignments. We had all the time we needed before the committee. It was necessary for the chairman to leave for a few minutes before we concluded, but the gentleman who took his place as chairman also accorded us every courtesy and every opportunity to express our views, but that was before any action had been taken on the question of how many committee assignments we should have. We were not apprised, and I am sure it was probably an oversight on the part of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]—we were not advised until yesterday how many committee assignments we were to have, what committees we were to be assigned to. The question that I presented in behalf of our group was not answered. I wanted to know, in behalf of the group I represented, and was authorized by the group to find out, if I could, what disposition was to be made of our request for committee assignments. That was not answered. As a result, we were waiting, day after day, for the committee on committees to answer the question as to whether or not we were to be given a definite group of assignments, or whether we were to be assigned by the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee.

We also wanted some suggestion as to how many committees we were to have. We wanted to know whether we would be given fair recognition. If we were to be given fair recognition, then, of course, we would make our requests accordingly, but without a reply to our request we did not know to whom or under what conditions we should make our requests. The result was that we did not know about it until the report of the committee on committees was finished. It was slightly revised yesterday.

I said earlier that the gentleman from North Carolina and his committee gave us a further hearing yesterday, but that was after the question had been thoroughly settled. They made some small changes after that, but the changes made were like crumbs from the table. They amounted to nothing. To all intents and purposes, the principle involved has not been changed, and we have not been treated fairly in the matter of committee assignments by this House.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BOILEAU. With pleasure.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman will admit that after he was given a hearing our committee began its deliberations, and the gentleman knew we were in session, and he submitted no list of the assignments he desired for his people until that committee had completed its work. Then we gave him another hearing. It was only a tentative conclusion at which we arrived. The gentleman did not submit his list until afterward, and the gentleman evidently knew we were in session.

Mr. BOILEAU. I knew you were in session, but I was waiting for you to tell us whether we would be treated fairly or whether we would have something crowded down our throats. We were not apprised of the decision of the committee until yesterday.

Mr. DOUGHTON. What right did the gentleman have to assume that he would not be treated fairly?

Mr. BOILEAU. Well, we have not been.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Well, that is just the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is my opinion, and that is what I am telling the House now. I do not think we have been treated fairly.

During the Seventy-fourth Congress there were 82 major committee assignments made to minority members. The Republicans, the Farmer-Laborites, and Progressives altogether had 82 assignments on the 11 major committees of the House.

There are 102 minority Members over on this side of the House in this Congress. There are 89 Republicans, 8 Progressives, and 5 Farmer-Laborites, a total of 102 minority Members. The fair proportion of this group of 13 Progressives and Farmer-Laborites is 12¾ percent of the major committee assignments. That is fair. If we are to have our share of minority assignments on major committees, that is what we are entitled to. If we are to be given 12¾ percent of the minority committee assignments on major committees, we would be entitled to 10.45—10 or 11, as you choose. We are willing to have 10.

At the present time and in this report we have three major committee assignments. In other words, in major committee assignments we are given just exactly 30 percent of what we were entitled to.

I say to you, sir, that as far as I am personally concerned I am not complaining about my committee assignments. I have had the pleasure during the past two Congresses to serve under the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] in the Committee on Agriculture. I am very happy on that committee. There is no other committee that I should prefer in this House. I want to go back on that committee, and the pending resolution reappoints me as a member of the Committee on Agriculture. There is no desire on my part for a different assignment, but I submit to you that most of my Progressive and Farmer-Labor colleagues have not been fairly treated; it is a question of fair treatment to the minority groups.

If the time has come when minority Members of this House cannot have their fair opportunity to express their views in the committees of this House, where the real work is done, then I say to you there is grave danger of minority groups being suppressed in the future. It is a matter of rights, not only rights of individual Members but rights of American people—people of liberal tendencies in your district as well as in our districts. I submit to you we are entitled to 10 major committee assignments, and under the same rules entitled to 25 minority committee assignments. We have three of the former.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Would the gentleman carry his argument so far as to maintain that if there were one member of a new minority party in the House other than the two minority parties the gentleman mentioned, that he would be entitled to take the same position?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That he, as just one member of a minority party, would be entitled to his proportional representation on all committees, including the majority committees?

Mr. BOILEAU. I will answer the gentleman—the gentleman does not understand me, I know; it is my fault. I am sure the gentleman does not get the meat of my argument. As a group we are entitled to representation. If there were only 1 third party Member, instead of 13, out of a total of 102 minority Members, he would be entitled to 1 percent of major committee assignments assigned to the minority. As there are 82 major committee assignments to minority Members, that individual Member would be entitled to 1 percent of 82, or 8 percent. Then, if he was not given a major committee, he should properly receive an assignment on a good minor committee, such as Labor, or a committee dealing with some subject affecting his district. This is especially true if he has served 2 years, 4 years, 6 years and over, as is the case with some members of our group. We certainly do not claim that one individual representing a minority party should serve on all committees of the House. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] have received major committee assignments in the pending resolution. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] for several years has been on the Committee on Military Affairs. That is a major committee. Although I have not discussed the subject with him, I feel that he is entirely satisfied. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW], who is now serving his fourth term, was placed on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I am very glad of that. That is the committee he has been after for a long while. I am glad this report gives him that assignment. However, there are two Members of our group—two Members from Wisconsin—who are now serving their third term and who have always received about the same minor committee assignments ever since they have been here. I submit to you that if they stay here 50 years, and if the policy of the Ways and Means Committee is not changed, these men will probably remain on these same minor committees. That is unfair. Men who are serving third terms on the Republican side usually get pretty good committee assignments.

Every single Republican serving his third term in the Seventy-fourth Congress had a major committee assignment; every man of the Republican Party who was serving his third term last session got a major committee assignment. Why should we not have the same consideration? Nineteen Republicans in the Seventy-fourth Congress were serving their second term, and 16 of them received major committee assignments.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF], the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BUCKLER], and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN], who are serving their second terms, should be given the same consideration given to other minority Members. They, too, should have fair consideration. At least one or two of them should be on a major committee.

In all fairness, at least two major committee assignments should be made among the group of three who are now serving their second terms. Do not confuse the issue as between minority assignments and major assignments. We have attempted to make that point clear.

There are 102 minority Members, 13 in our group; in other words, we make up 12¾ percent of the minority and are entitled to this percentage of the total minority assignments on major and minor committees. We asked that we be given a block of assignments, 12¾ percent of the major and minor committee assignments; that they be given to us as a group for us to do with as we pleased. We asked as an alternative, if that request was not granted, that the Democratic majority take out of the minority committee assignments on major and minor committees our fair share and apportion them to us. I did not find out the result until yesterday, although it has been hanging fire since the 30th of December. I came down here in plenty of time and had plenty of opportunity to interview those in authority. We asked the majority party to give us a block of assignments to divide among ourselves.

There are two sides to the argument as to whether or not that should have been done. Some of my colleagues on the Democratic side, and particularly one or two distinguished gentleman from the Middle West were afraid that perhaps there might be some political implications if we Members of the Farmer-Labor and Progressive Parties were to be given a fair deal or a fair share of the committee assignments. In other words there might be an unfavorable reaction. In my judgment, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts has demonstrated that he himself fears that situation because he continually emphasizes the fact that we are not members of a third national political party. Let me say to the Members of the House that the rules and precedents of this House refer to "Members of the House" and not political parties.

Mr. Speaker, the fathers of this country did not anticipate that the time would ever come when a man had to belong to one or the other of two "choice" political parties in order to get a square deal in the congressional committee assignments. The fathers did not anticipate that one hand would wash the other and that the Members of the majority side would give to one minority party more than was their due so that, when the time should come that the majority was on the other side that the favors would be returned.

Mr. Speaker, that is not fair. That was not contemplated by the fathers. It was contemplated that this Congress would be run on a basis of equal representation.

Yesterday we went before the committee on committees after this pamphlet was printed. We had been given no opportunity previously because we had no information before as to who would decide on our assignments. Yesterday for the first time we had the opportunity to make our request as to individual assignments. We had no opportunity before that to present our preferences. That was the first time we had any knowledge as to whom we should go in order to get committee assignments.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman says he was not given an opportunity until after this pamphlet was printed. I may say this was not printed until last night and the gentleman was given an opportunity to be heard and to make his choice yesterday, and, as a matter of fact, there were several changes made for him.

Mr. BOILEAU. I may be in error, but my information is to the effect that night before last this pamphlet was sent to the Public Printer. Of course, this information is not official. I recognize the fact that some changes were made yesterday. Whether this is a revised edition or whether it actually had not gone to the Printer, I am not informed, but whatever the gentleman from North Carolina says on that point will be accepted by me as an absolute fact.

Mr. DOUGHTON. We were very glad to give the gentleman a hearing, and, as I previously stated, we revised the list and gave him two or three additional assignments.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is correct, and all of them were assignments to minor committees and do not amount to anything. The assignments were not given to the Members who enjoyed seniority. If a Member had the opportunity to choose, it was as between being assigned to one unimportant committee or another. He had only that choice.

We have nothing to say about the election of members of the majority committee on committees.

One of our Members requested that he be assigned to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and it was pointed out that this gentleman, who is now serving his third term, was a member of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. In other words, because both of those committees deal to some extent with money, it was suggested as an argument against us that one committee was as good as the other.

When I first came here, as a Member of the Seventy-second Congress, I wanted to be assigned to the Committee on Military Affairs. Being a new Member I was pacified by being assigned to the Committee on War Claims. I am now serving on the Committee on Agriculture, and I may say to the Republican Members that although I was not usually in accord with the views of the majority of the Republicans, when I served here two terms as a progressive Republican, that nevertheless the Republicans during my second term gave me as much consideration as I could hope for. I was placed on the Agricultural Committee originally by the Republicans, and I have been there ever since. You Members of the majority have been kind enough to keep me on that committee, but have not given any consideration whatever to many other Members of the Farmer-Labor and Progressive Parties.

We are not asking you to kick off any Republican Members from these committees. Bear in mind that there is at least one minority vacancy on every single major committee in this House. We would not ask that a Member of the Republican minority who has been serving as a minority member of any committee be replaced; but as there are now vacancies, that instead of having one Republican Member holding down two major committee assignments, it seems to me consideration should be given to Members of the Farmer-Labor-Progressive group. The majority Members are giving preference to Members who are serving their first term in this House. We want to be very fair. One of our group, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BUCKLER] has been endeavoring to get on the Committee on Agriculture for some time. He stated to me that was his first choice, but stated very frankly he did not think he had a chance to get on that committee. He referred to the fact that I, as a Member of the Progressive Party, had been on that committee for two terms, and would therefore have preference over him and probably be retained on that committee. He pointed also to the fact that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDRESEN] has been serving on that committee for some time, and would undoubtedly be reassigned to the committee as a minority member. He felt he would not have a chance, although he was serving his second term in this House. The gentleman was very modest in his second request. It so happens that in his State there are located a good many Indians; therefore, he asked to be assigned to the Committee on Indian Affairs. That was one of the changes that was made yesterday afternoon. The gentleman from Minnesota was assigned to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

However, if we had been told we would have our fair share of committee assignments some days ago, we would have made more specific requests for major committees, but we were fighting yesterday with our backs to the wall. Agreement had already been made with the Republicans, and, although our request had been before your committee on committees since the first of the year, we were kept completely in the dark. I submit that we have not had a fair opportunity to state our requests.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHNEIDER] expressed his first choice as one of the major committees, the Committee on Appropriations, and his second choice was to remain where he is now, on the Committee on Labor. He wanted membership on the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads provided he could also remain on Labor, but the majority said: "No; you cannot have both." Why did they say, "You cannot have both Post Office and Post Roads and Labor at the same time"? Because "we do not give that kind of assignments to our own members." This was said to me a number of times, and, as I see it, it is a ridiculous argument. They say, "If we give one of our own Members an assignment to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, we do not give him anything else." I have tried my very best to explain that we are not asking to be treated as you are treated, but as other minority Members of the House.

On the Republican side I know of instances where men hold down two assignments on some of the most important and exclusive committees of the House. So it seems to me to come with poor grace from any man who represents you on the majority committee and who by force of circumstances is supposed to represent me and those who belong to the same group as I do should insist upon measuring the minority on the same basis as you measure the majority, when he himself is one of those who would have most influence in deciding how many assignments the minority should have.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we ask only for fairness; and bear in mind we are not asking that you take away a single assignment from the Democrats; not at all. This will not change the status of Democrats. All that will happen if you vote down this resolution is that it will be held up a little bit, but you will be doing the right thing and treating the minority as it should be; and while I am frank to say I do not suppose you will do this, yet you ought to do it, because if you do this you will be showing that it is your intention in this Congress to deal fairly with the other Members of the House and apportion committee assignments among the minority in accordance with their seniority. Just give us what we are entitled to as a matter of right and as a matter of justice and in accordance with our numerical strength seniority and we will be satisfied.

There is not a single man in our group who is now serving his first term who is making any claim for a major committee assignment, although I may say that in the last Congress there were five Republicans who were given major committee assignments during their first term, so it would not be so awful if one of our group should aspire to receive similar treatment.

I want to withhold a little of my time. I have tried to explain this matter as we view it. There were several gentlemen who asked me a short time ago to yield, and I felt I had to decline to do so at that time. If any of them now desire me to yield for a question, I shall be very happy to do so.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman answer the question I propounded in the early part of his statement as to whether or not he considers the Progressive Party and the Farmer-Labor Party a national political party?

Mr. BOILEAU. I certainly do. We certainly consider ourselves as a national political party. We now have 13 men representing our parties in the National House of Representatives and we have several in the United States Senate, and let me tell you that we may have some from some other States before long, and I may tell you that our party is not only a national party but we are on the ascendency, and I wonder if any of you will say as much for the Democratic Party.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. WITHROW. I want it understood that as an individual I am perfectly satisfied with the committee assignment that has been allocated to me in the resolution on the Clerk's desk, but I do feel that as a group we have not been treated fairly, and the question I should like to propcund to the gentleman from Wisconsin is this: It is not a question of recognition of a national party, it is a question of dealing fairly with individual Members of the minority group.

Mr. BOILEAU. The rules of the House and all the precedents do not refer to political parties but to Members of the House as majority and minority Members.

Mr. WITHROW. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. WITHROW. Under the present system, I wonder what would happen if at the next session of Congress we would find the Republican Party minority dwindled to 43 and the Farmer-Labor-Progressive group would consist of 51? In that case would the gentleman be inclined to feel as though the Republican Party would still be recognized as the minority group and that we, with 51 in our group, would be compelled to go to the Democratic majority and have them include us in their group and give us assignments out of the majority group?

Mr. BOILEAU. I think about that time you would find the Democratic committee on committees saying, "Well, we could not see the force of your argument 2 years ago, but we have now come to the conclusion you were right." [Laughter.]

Mr. WITHROW. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. WITHROW. Assuming that possibly that might occur——

Mr. BOILEAU. I wish the gentleman would not put in the word "possibly."

Mr. WITHROW. Assume that would occur, and the Republicans had 43 and the Farmer-Laborites and Progressives had 51, by any stretch of imagination could you then imagine the Republican Party going to the Democratic majority to have their assignments made by the majority Members in their caucus? That is just exactly the way we are being treated at the present time. We are not being treated fairly as individuals of the minority group.

Mr. BOILEAU. I think the gentleman is absolutely correct.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to this fact, that he himself is a member of a very important committee, the Committee on Agriculture, a major committee. His colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW] is a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, a very important committee. Another gentleman is on the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, which has some importance. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Well, how much? I recall reading a book sometime ago in which the joke of the whole thing was that some man was elected to Congress and he was put on the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. COLDEN. Well, I know certain Members of this House who are members of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures who take their jobs very seriously.

Mr. BOILEAU. It may be that you gentlemen from your part of the country do, but out our way we cannot see the importance of it. We are not going to be mollified into a state of blissful complacence because of assignments to that committee.

Mr. COLDEN. Another is a member of the Committee on Labor; another Member is on the Committee on Military Affairs; another, Rivers and Harbors, and another the Committee on Roads.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman has made his point. I do not yield further.

Mr. COLDEN. I want to ask the gentleman, Now, does not the gentleman from Wisconsin believe that his party has been treated as fairly as the average Member on the majority side?

Mr. BOILEAU. No, no, in the first place; and in the second place, what of it? We are not majority Members. We are minority Members. I hope the gentleman understands that. I do not yield further until I have answered the gentleman's question.

We are entitled to 12.75 percent of the major committee assignments. There are 82 major committee assignments. If the gentleman wants to include in that some that are now considered as minor in the classification of major committees, then we would be entitled to 25 or 30 instead of 10.

The fact remains that the major committee assignments, exclusive committee assignments that you Democrats recognize as such, is what we are speaking about. We are not talking about these other committees. If that is the case, every Democrat has a major committee assignment, if you take in all the committees that do some important work.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. What percentage does the gentleman figure he is entitled to?

Mr. BOILEAU. There are 82 apportioned among the minority of the House. We have 12¾ percent of the total number of minority Members of the House. Therefore we would be entitled to 12¾ percent of 82, or 10 and a fraction. If you consider it according to seniority, we would be entitled to 8 or 9.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The new Democratic Members of the House, according to the way I figure it, would be entitled to about 22 percent of the major committee assignments.

Mr. BOILEAU. We are not new Democratic Members.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Did the new Democratic Members get their percentage?

Mr. BOILEAU. I am talking about seniority.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am talking about Democratic Members.

Mr. BOILEAU. We have seniority. Our average seniority is almost as great as the Republicans.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. How many major committee assignments did you get?

Mr. BOILEAU. We have three, 30 percent of what we are entitled to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. How many terms have those Members served?

Mr. BOILEAU. We have one man who is serving his sixth term. One his fifth, two their fourth terms. We have two other Members who are serving a third term. There are three in our group serving a second term. I said a moment ago we are minority Members. Out of 19 Republican Members serving a second term in the Congress, 16 of them have major committee assignments.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. The point I make is that on account of the large number of new Members, the committee had to apparently deal unjustly with a lot of their own Members.

Mr. BOILEAU. We are not asking that these assignments come out of your allotment at all. We are minority Members, and we ask that our allotments come out of the minority side. There are 89 Republicans on that side. There are 78—at least I am close to it—there were 79 last year, but there are 78 assignments among the Republicans on major committees; 78 among 89 Members. They have 17 new Members over there, so they have to double up or else everybody serving more than one term will have a major committee. There are quite a number of Republicans over there who do not want major committee assignments for one reason or another. Many of them who have served any length of time are ranking members on a minor committee. Rather than give up their seniority on the committee they have served on so long they prefer to stay on that committee rather than go on a major committee; so that every Republican who wants a major committee assignment can get it. There were seven Members on the Republican side last year that served on two very important major committees.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I understand that one of your Members was offered a membership on the Labor Committee and he turned it down.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is not a fact, unless something has happened that I do not know about.

Mr. BEITER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. BEITER. The gentleman referred to the Committee on War Claims as being a minor committee. I am chairman of that committee, and I want to say that there are four or five major bills before it. I consider them major bills.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I suggest that I served on that committee and did not consider it a major committee. I know that the gentleman will make it an important committee, and that his committee will undoubtedly handle some very important legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOILEAU. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Would my friend rather have the members of his group assigned by the Republican committee on committees than by the Democratic committee on committees?

Mr. BOILEAU. It might just as well be that way, after the treatment we have had.

Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Have I the right to reserve the balance of my time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin can yield the remainder of his time, but has not the right to reserve it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to my colleague the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, as I said before, as an individual I am perfectly satisfied with the assignment given me in the resolution, namely, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I realize this is a very important committee, and I am very desirous of serving upon it. But, as a whole, our group as part of the minority of the House has not been treated fairly. I am not going to repeat what my colleague has already said, but I do want to say that in my opinion the crux of this question is that sometime ago an agreement was made between the Republicans and the Democrats, who at that time were the only parties in the House of Representatives. That unwritten agreement was to the effect that a certain ratio would be maintained between the majority and the minority parties regardless of how few Members the minority party had. In accordance with said agreement the ratio is being maintained at the present time. But what has happened? There has come to the House of Representatives another group, a truly minority group. The Republicans demand in this particular case that the ratio shall be maintained, and the result is that we the Progressive and Farmer-Labor groups are being sacrificed.

If we were treated on a par with the Republican membership of this House, we should have 10 major committee assignments, whereas we have only 3 major committee assignments. This is the unfairness of it all, and, my friends on the Democratic side of the aisle, you are being penalized as well as we, because our committee assignments at the present time really belong to you as a majority. We should not be forced to take our committee assignments from the majority or from the committee on committees of the Republicans; they should be assigned to us in a block for us to do with as we please, because, Mr. Speaker, we are in every sense a part of the minority group of this House.

We are not permitted a voice on the Ways and Means Committee. You do not intend to give us a position on the Ways and Means Committee. We cannot attend, and we are not permitted to belong to the so-called committee on committees of the Republicans. We have no representation as a minority group.

The question in my mind seems to be: Are you going to continue ignoring us as a minority group? As for our being recognized as a national political party, I say to you at this time—and I point with pride to the group to which I belong and of which I am chairman—that we Progressives in this House and the Farmer-Laborites have supported the President of the United States much more consistently and just as intelligently as any group in the United States; and we intend to proceed along these same lines when we feel that the President is advocating principles in which we believe.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman agree with me that the rules and the precedents of the House are such that the majority side could have always made the assignments to the third party Members, but that they are, according to the the rules, to come out of the allotment set aside for minority Members?

Mr. WITHROW. Yes; the gentleman has stated the matter correctly.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is the gentleman dissatisfied with the committee assignments made 2 years ago?

Mr. WITHROW. No; I am not particularly dissatisfied—but just a moment, it is not fair to ask me for a blanket statement as to whether I am dissatisfied or not. I say since that time we who belong to this minority group, every one of us, have been reelected; and we have seniority that we did not have 2 years ago.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman is astute, but he has not answered my question, whether he was dissatisfied with the committee assignments made 2 years ago.

Mr. WITHROW. I was not particularly dissatisfied.

Mr. McCORMACK. Or was the gentleman's group dissatisfied?

Mr. WITHROW. No. Two years ago our requests were very modest.

Mr. McCORMACK. But the gentleman's group is dissatisfied this year?

Mr. WITHROW. Yes, indeed. The question before the Ways and Means Committee as we propounded it, and we had every reason to believe it would be answered, was whether or not we were going to have assignments given to us in a block. That was the question before the Ways and Means Committee, and that question was not answered to us as a group. We had every reason to believe and to assume it would be answered.

If that question had been answered and you had said "No; you are not going to receive your assignment as a block" then we would have submitted to you the request of our group, because just as soon as you indicated you were not going to give us our assignments in a block, we did immediately give the Ways and Means Committee the request of every Member of our two delegations, as well as their second and third choice.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to my colleague from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman and I attended a meeting of the committee on committees at the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina, who gave us the opportunity to appear. We did go before the committee and ask them for a fair share of committee assignments. Is it not a fact that the day we went there we had a list of requests of our Members if the committee had shown any disposition to ask for it?

Mr. WITHROW. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. May I remind the gentleman that his group made the same request this year that was made 2 years ago with reference to block or group committee assignments. We received that request then, considered it, and declined to grant it. We received his request again this year and considered it. What reason does the gentleman have to expect we would take different action to that taken 2 years ago?

Mr. WITHROW. The issue was not handled in that manner.

Mr. COOPER. It certainly was. The presentation was the same then as now.

Mr. WITHROW. If my memory serves me right, it was not made an issue at that time.

Mr. COOPER. It was identically the same then as now.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman says it was not made an issue 2 years ago. Why was it not made an issue at that time? The same situation existed. If the gentleman is consistent, he would have made the same argument 2 years ago. As a matter of fact, away down deep in his heart he never expected it and he knows he is not entitled to it.

Mr. WITHROW. We are entitled to it, but we do not expect it.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I say to the gentleman that last year we had as many major committee assignments as we have this year. Last year the gentleman from Wisconsin, who now has the floor, was a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. This year he has been assigned to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. We still have the same number of major committee assignments, although we have more Members this year, and all of our Members have more seniority, and that seniority entitles them to more major committee assignments.

Mr. WITHROW. The gentleman is correct. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition in support of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the question of committee assignments is a very hard one and a very embarrassing one. I can assure you of that fact as a result of my 6 years' service as a member of the Ways and Means Committee. What I say is not in any controversial way but in an explanatory manner to the Members of the House, because there is no object in a Democrat entering into a controversy with my friend the gentleman from Wisconsin, who represents a group of only 13 or 14 members, because the weight is all on one side. However, the gentleman from Wisconsin has made some statements which I think should be clarified in the RECORD.

The gentleman contends that his group, as a matter of right, are entitled to committee assignments. Of course, the answer to that is self-evident. I can see the logic of his position from his angle, but certainly the Progressive Members of the House, elected in Wisconsin and California, and the Farmer-Laborites, elected in Minnesota, purely State parties, are not members of a national political party.

This is nothing but a forerunner of an attempt to break down the two-party system which has stood in this country for many decades. While realizing they have a perfect right to make the demand, and while they are entitled to committee assignments, nevertheless, their contention that they are entitled to it as a matter of right, until they have definitely established themselves as a national political party, seems to me to be without foundation.

Let us pursue this a little further. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] asked a very pertinent question, predicated upon the assumption that one Member was elected as an independent, would he have the right of minority representation? Carrying out the argument and theory of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU], he would be entitled to one assignment on every committee of the House.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Assume that three, four, or a dozen ran for the Democratic nomination or Republican nomination or Progressive nomination in the State of Wisconsin and were defeated. Then suppose they ran as independents on election day and were elected. What is to stop those individuals, in no way connected with a national party, from coming in, banding together, and demanding the right to serve on various committees as members of a minority party?

Furthermore, the gentlemen over there claim representation as Members of one group, when they were elected, as a matter of fact, from two groups, the Progressives from Wisconsin and one gentleman from California and the other the Farmer-Labor group from Minnesota. The 13 or 14 Members come here now and decide to form one political party. What authority did they get from the people of their districts or their States to band together and suddenly decide to merge into one party?

Mr. BOILEAU and Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota rose.

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield first to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. I want to ask the gentleman this question: I understood the gentleman to say that if one man should come here representing a minority group, he could, according to my views, ask for representation on every committee of the House. Does the gentleman think my argument could be construed as one favoring that position?

Mr. McCORMACK. Why, certainly. If the gentleman's argument is sound, that is the only sound conclusion that could be reached.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I suggest to the gentleman that my argument is that every minority Member or every group of minority Members should have a fair proportion of committee assignments apportioned by the House among the minority, and that one minority group should not have committee assignments at the expense of other minority Members.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. The reason I am asking the gentleman this question is because the gentleman is determining the status of the Farmer-Labor Party of Minnesota as a third party.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am not determining that. The gentleman is misquoting me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I want to ask the gentleman this question: Does not the gentleman know that Democratic groups from Washington came to Minnesota a year ago pleading and begging that we not file a national third party ticket [applause], and now that we did not file a ticket, we who supported Roosevelt in November 1936 are in the basement, while the Republicans who fought him are in the parlor. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's statement makes no difference with respect to what I said, that we are concerned with national political parties.

Now, coming to the matter of committee assignments to individual members of his group, there is something in what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] states about that. I want to be frank. Unfortunately, the fault lies with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] or someone——

Mr. BOILEAU. Wait a second.

Mr. McCORMACK. Wait until I finish my statement.

Unfortunately the fault lies with the group itself. Two years ago the group contacted me and they contacted other Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, and they gave us a program of committee assignments and we did a pretty good job. The Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee want to give this group of Members the best assignments we possibly can, and 2 years ago the gentleman gave us the specific committee assignments that were sought and were content then with the results after the assignments had been made. As a group they received as good consideration as any delegation from any State having Democratic Members.

This year they came in and made a fight for minority representation as a matter of right, knowing what the answer would be, and knowing what the answer should be, because individual Members have intimated they knew they were not entitled, as a matter of right under existing circumstances, to minority representation. Then this group, or the spokesman of the same, failed to do what every Democratic delegation or every Member does from every State in the Union by presenting its, or their, own program or desires on committee assignments. Louisiana, Missouri, Michigan, Massachusetts, and every State in the Union with Democratic Members usually hold a meeting and present to the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee the committee assignments that the Members from their State are seeking.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am sure the gentleman wants to be fair. We are not Members of the majority, and how should we be expected to pursue any other method of seeking committee assignments than to submit our request for major committee assignments. The request was made by sending a memorandum to our distinguished Speaker on the 28th of December, and I received a courteous reply from the Speaker suggesting I address a copy of the communication to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and the individual members of the Ways and Means Committee, which I did. This was presented to them before the Congress convened, and every member of the committee had it on his desk before the 1st of January. The letter was sent to members of the Ways and Means Committee not later than the 1st of January. Our request was made and we never knew until yesterday what action was taken on our request.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman did know, did he not, that Members of his group wanted major committee assignments, and that the letter the gentleman refers to was a request or demand for such representation as a matter of right.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman will not find that stated in the letter in that way.

Mr. McCORMACK. In that communication did the gentleman say that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL] wanted Ways and Means, with Foreign Affairs as his second choice; that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN], as I recall it, wanted as first choice Rivers and Harbors and then Indian Affairs, and also stating what the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BERNARD] and the others wanted? Did the gentleman put that in his communication?

Mr. BOILEAU. No.

Mr. McCORMACK. You did 2 years ago, did you not?

Mr. BOILEAU. We did not ask for time before your committee 2 years ago.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know, but 2 years ago the gentleman and I conferred, did we not?

Mr. BOILEAU. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. And did the gentleman confer with other Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee?

Mr. BOILEAU. I did.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts 5 additional minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. So the gentleman knew from his experience last year the course he should have taken this year.

Mr. BOILEAU. We knew about the course, but we did not know what status we would be given.

Mr. McCORMACK. Why did you not ask for committee assignments as you did 2 years ago?

Mr. BOILEAU. Because we were waiting for a decision as to how many assignments we would get. We wanted to know whether you were going to treat us fairly or unfairly, and that is the issue here.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman talks about fairly or unfairly——

Mr. BOILEAU. That is the issue in this case.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's charge of unfairness is not fair.

Mr. BOILEAU. I do not know it, and I will say to the gentleman that I consider it grossly unfair to make such a statement when I made the request to all the responsible heads of the Democratic majority as early as the 28th of December. As soon as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] arrived in Washington I went to see him about this matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. I now yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON].

Mr. VINSON of Kentucky. In reference to the Farmer-Labor group, I want to state that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] was assigned to the major Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. RYAN, the one Democrat from Minnesota, desired assignment to the Committee on Agriculture last year. It could not be given him. This year he wanted the same assignment, but there was no vacancy on the committee.

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota made request for Agriculture as his first choice and secondly Indian Affairs. He received Indian Affairs, Census, and Invalid Pensions. The other three Members from Minnesota are serving their first terms and have received appointments which are favorable as compared with many Democratic Members who are here for their first terms.

Mr. TEIGAN, of Minnesota, has been assigned to the Committee on the Civil Service, one of his expressed choices, and the Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota received assignment to the Committee on Revision of the Laws and Indian Affairs. Mr. BERNARD, of Minnesota, War Claims and Pensions. Boiling it down, the Farmer-Labor group has been treated as fairly as many Democrats of similar service.

Mr. McCORMACK. In conclusion, the charge of unfairness on the part of my friend from Wisconsin is a serious one which cannot be ignored. The gentleman from Wisconsin admits that he was treated fairly 2 years ago. They were satisfied with their treatment 2 years ago, and they left it to the judgment of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee to take care of the Members of their group. I am sorry that the gentleman from Wisconsin did not present the committee with a list as he did 2 years ago.

The gentleman knows that 2 years ago I would come out from committee and confer with the gentleman from Wisconsin and other Members of his group to ascertain their views, conveying the same to the other Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee. Other Members were doing the same thing. Our desire was to treat the Progressive Members and the Farmer-Labor Members with as much consideration as we could. If a situation has arisen this year where, outside of the question of right of representation being denied or not being acted upon because we did not consider it was entitled to consideration in absence of a national political minority party requesting it, we are very sorry that a list was not submitted to us until after the assignments had been made; until practically all the assignments had been made. There is no question in my mind—I can speak only for myself—that during the next 2 years as vacancies occur, as far as I am concerned, and I think to some extent I bespeak the mind of other members of the Ways and Means Committee, when vacancies occur in the different committees, the desires of that group will be given every favorable consideration possible.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts 2 additional minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is an unfortunate situation, but a situation that exists, and is not due to the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee. I am not going to say that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] and other Members are entirely to blame. It was one of those unfortunate misunderstandings that arise, but the misunderstanding arose as the result of the failure of the gentleman from Wisconsin to communicate to the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee the specific committee assignments that were sought.

As we look over the picture, this particular group got pretty nearly as good representation, without a specific program being presented to us, as any State that has the same number of Democratic Members in this House at the present time.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman claim that had we presented our request for major committee assignments you would have given them to us because you believed we were entitled to them?

Mr. McCORMACK. No, no; not as a political party.

Mr. BOILEAU. We would not have gotten any more had we asked for specific assignments, would we?

Mr. McCORMACK. Well, the gentleman knows my state of mind.

Mr. BOILEAU. What is the gentleman's view about that?

Mr. McCORMACK. I have the greatest respect for the Members of the gentleman's group. I would extend to them the individual consideration that I would extend to any Democrat in making committee assignments. The views of the gentleman's group have received extreme consideration, the same as they received the maximum degree of consideration 2 years ago. The reason for the group represented by the gentleman probably not receiving one or two more major committee assignments is due to the gentleman himself or his own group in failing to present to the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee a program that we could have discussed and acted upon.

Mr. Speaker, we could discuss this forever and get nowhere. The fault lies, in the main, with the gentleman from Wisconsin himself. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK].

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, we might as well get this matter out of our systems so we can start on something worth while.

In the State of North Dakota the Republican Party is in control of the progressive element of the State, known as the Nonpartisan League. When you speak about Republicans in North Dakota you mean the same brand of politics that you have in the Progressives of Wisconsin and the Farmer-Laborites of Minnesota. Their philosophies are exactly the same.

Together with my colleagues I occupy a peculiar position in this Congress now, because we remained with the Republican Party. I think we are both about as welcome to the ruling class of Republicans in this House as a weasel would be in a rabbit's nest. [Laughter.] So I have not asked for any committee assignments at all. The only one I hoped I would get would be membership in the Committee of the Whole House. [Laughter.] If that is going to interfere with the sublime supremacy of the Republican Party, I will withhold that request.

I am not asking for any committee assignments at all. I cannot ask for any from the Democrats, although every time a vote comes I have suported the Democrats probably 90 percent of the time. I did not do so because you were Democrats. I did it because you were right. [Applause.]

In the coming session of this Congress I expect to take the same attitude exactly.

So far as my ability goes, I am willing to serve anywhere. In the Seventy-fourth Congress my Republican brethren seemed to have sensed my peculiar fitness for public service, and I was assigned to some wonderful committees. I was given a membership on the Committee on Pensions, which met once during each session. [Laughter.]

I was given another committee assignment on Territories, which I think met a little more frequently. I was also given an assignment on the Committee on Indian Affairs, but whenever I brought in a report from that committee, not a single Republican paid any attention to it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman will recall that 2 years ago he talked with me with respect to committee assignments, and the gentleman stated that he had only one preference, and that was the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is that not true?

Mr. BURDICK. That is right.

Mr. KNUTSON. And the gentleman was given that appointment?

Mr. BURDICK. Oh, yes. And every Republican here failed to back me up when I made a recommendation. [Laughter.]

I want to take this occasion to say that I hope we can straighten out this committee business with dispatch and settle it within the next few moments, because we have, in the States where we have had no rain for 7 years, a matter of great importance. The Resettlement Administration has not any funds. The meager funds they now have will be exhausted February 1. They are trying to keep families out in that area on $18 a month. It is not the fault of the Administration, because there is no money available. In a State like North Dakota, where $18 a month will hardly pay for fuel, we are trying to keep 37,000 families during the winter on an appropriation of that kind.

We are now about to ask for seed. Some say that the President has asked for too much money. I say to you that he has not asked for enough. [Applause.] Instead of asking for $967,000,000 to put this Nation on its feet for the next 12 months I am in favor of asking for $1,500,000,000. A Government does not go wrong in giving the people of the Nation a chance to live [applause], and I hope that those charged with the control of this House will, at the first opportunity, make available to the farmers of the Northwest feed and seed, will remove the restrictions, and make it possible for them to get the necessary elements to make a living for themselves and their families. Red-tape restrictions must be removed and help given in time. Delay means ruin and helpless families. If you will do this, I shall be satisfied to pass up all committee assignments and remain on the Committee of the Whole House. There I will do my best to represent the people of my State. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK].

PROGRESSIVE AND FARMER-LABOR GROUPS HELPED ELECT ROOSEVELT

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I feel that the committee has been entirely fair and has done the best it could. Certain statements have been made, however, upon which I should like to comment, for they are more or less a reflection on the assistance and cooperation of the Progressives in helping elect Franklin D. Roosevelt President. Some inference has been made that the Progressive and Farmer-Labor Parties do not, in effect, constitute a national movement. I attended the Progressive National Conference in Chicago. I am a member of its executive committee and am proud of my membership on it. The Democratic Party was proud of the Progressives at the time. We should be proud of that group now and give them recognition. Certainly if it is not a national party, it is a national movement, and they are entitled to every respect.

When the Democratic Party was having a hard time passing the holding-company bill and the T. V. A. bill every single member of the Farmer-Labor and Progressive Parties went down the line with our party and the President 100 percent. I believe at one time the vote was so close that the bill was saved only by the Progressive and the Farmer-Labor group in this House.

I believe that we should go out of our way to be fair with this group of Progressives. I am, however, going to vote to sustain the Committee on Ways and Means, because, although I say it regretfully, I do not believe the Progressive-Farmer-Labor group has been quite as aggressive as they should have been in asking for these committee assignments ahead of time. I will vote for their contention next year.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman mean to say we have not been aggressive in asking for these committee assignments, when I came here early in order to present the matter, and on the 28th of December had started working on it? Every time I saw a member of the Ways and Means Committee I asked him, "Have you made a decision? Are you going to give us these assignments?"

Mr. MAVERICK. You must admit the gentleman's party comes from two States, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Mr. BOILEAU. And California.

PROGRESSIVE GROUP HAS REPRESENTATION ON THREE MAJOR COMMITTEES

Mr. MAVERICK. Your party has membership upon the Committee on Agriculture, which is vital in Wisconsin and Minnesota. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] has an assignment on the Committee on Military Affairs and Mr. WITHROW has an assignment on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. These are very important major committees, and very good assignments.

Mr. BOILEAU. But I call to the attention of the gentleman from Texas that we have Members in our group who have served here longer than he has, yet the gentleman, a first-termer last year, held a major committee assignment. These other men, too, have been working mighty hard in this House.

Mr. MAVERICK. My assignment on the Military Affairs Committee came after a very active fight for it. Also I come from a military district. I know your group has worked hard and I think the gentleman's group is entitled to more assignments, but have failed to get them probably because they were not active enough.

Mr. BOILEAU. How does the gentleman know how active we were when he was not with us? The records show how active we were.

Mr. MAVERICK. But the gentleman did not get active soon enough; I did not say the gentleman was not active at this time.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman is not on the Committee on Ways and Means; he does not know how much we went around. The chairman of the Democratic committee on committees knew about it. We asked him to give us proper consideration.

Mr. MAVERICK. I repeat that I do not think the gentleman was as active as he should have been. I will vote with the gentleman next year, but not this year, because the gentleman was not active enough.

Mr. BOILEAU. Thanks for the support! It is appreciated! It is a great help!

Mr. MAVERICK. If my distinguished friend is angry about it, I am sorry.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret very keenly the grievances that the gentleman from Wisconsin expresses and that he feels that his group, as he terms it, has not had the consideration and the recognition to which he thinks they are entitled. I may say as chairman of the committee that they had more consideration in the way of being given a hearing and opportunity to express their wishes than any other group in the House. They were accorded a hearing before our committee. At the outset they asked for recognition as a group, but they admit today they did not expect that.

If they did not expect it why did they act on that hypothesis? The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW] stated very frankly that he did not expect it. Why did they not submit their request for the assignments to which he thought they were entitled? Of course, if we had conceded all of the assignments requested later by the gentleman from Wisconsin we would have given them much more favorable consideration and more desirable committee assignments than we gave Members of our own party. The gentleman knows that and he is bound to admit in all fairness that we have given him as desirable committee assignments as we have given the Members of our own party. Even after we had tentatively agreed on the membership of the various committees, in order to be absolutely fair we gave the gentleman an opportunity to submit his list which he had theretofore failed to do. We reconsidered and shifted the Members around and gave the Members of his party additional assignments in order to go as far as we possibly could to help the situation.

Mr. Speaker, every member of our committee desired to be entirely fair. We respected the gentleman in his views, although we were not in accord with them. We did not think his views were well founded, but we did think he was honest in his convictions and in thinking he was entitled to what he asked for. We have given them all we thought they were entitled to, and more than they asked, because they did not ask for anything in the way of individual assignments. I feel they have been given every consideration to which they are entitled under the circumstances, and in view of the way in which they presented the matter.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I say to the gentleman, and I think he will agree with me, that when I appeared before his committee the first time, and when I spoke to the gentleman personally, I made it very clear that we believed the matter could be properly taken care of by giving us a block of committee assignments for ourselves. However, I said very distinctly, and the correspondence is very clear, that all we were really after so far as fairness in the matter is concerned was that we should have a fair share of minority assignments, whether they be given to us in block or the committee apportion them to us.

Mr. DOUGHTON. But the gentleman did not specify any committees his group desired.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman did not tell us of the decision of his committee until afterward, and the gentleman knew we were asking for more than three major committees. What did the gentleman think we were asking for?

Mr. DOUGHTON. What could the gentleman possibly have lost by specifying what committee assignments his Members desired? He did not do that.

Mr. BOILEAU. We presented those 2 years ago.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 235, noes 10.

So the resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following letters of resignation from committees:

JANUARY 13, 1937.

Hon. W. B. BANKHEAD,

The Honorable WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Accounts for the Seventy-fifth Congress.

A. L. FORD.

JANUARY 13, 1937.

Hon. W. B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Accounts, effective immediately.

JOE STARNES.

The resignations were accepted.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the death of the late Colonel MacCormack, formerly Commissioner of Immigration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting in the Appendix thereof a speech delivered by Commissioner Payne on Radio at the College of the City of New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on a House resolution in regard to tax-exempt securities which I am today introducing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. CARLSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

CHILD LABOR

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I think we are all tremendously interested in the abolition of child labor. I have today introduced a resolution asking the Secretary of Labor to furnish to the House a record, if she has it, on the number of children employed in each State in the Union under the ages of 18, 17, and 16; also, the wages paid these children.

Mr. Speaker, I think it very important that the Members of the House know the number of children employed and the States in which child labor still exists. If the Department of Labor cannot furnish us all of this information, I shall ask for an immediate census covering child labor.

It is manifestly unfair to growing children to employ them in industry and works additional hardship upon labor in States which have laws prohibiting child labor. I earnestly hope this information will be returned to the House very promptly.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1937

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, whose blessed Son came not to be ministered unto but to minister, we beseech Thee so to direct us in our work that following in His steps we may give ourselves wholly to the service of our fellow men.

Fill us with righteous scorn of earth's ensnaring lure, quicken each laggard step and faltering heart in our conflict for that right, that, contending against evil with a courage born of goodness, we may banish all oppression from our midst.

Grant that with singleness of heart we may wisely serve Thee in our generation, by promoting such concord and harmony at home as will lead the nations of the world into the way of truth and justice, to the establishment of universal peace as the blessed fruit of righteousness. We ask it in the name and for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

On request of Mr. ROBINSON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, January 12, 1937, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

AMERICAN NEUTRALITY IN TIME OF WAR

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations a letter addressed to me by John H. Bradfute, president of the Kiwanis Club of Pittsburgh, together with certain questions which have been addressed to me by constituents on the question of neutrality in time of war.

I am confident that the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, which is renowned because of its distinguished members having such intimate knowledge over a long period of time on these important issues, will give satisfactory consideration to these problems. The questions presented represent the thinking of members of peace organizations, chambers of commerce, and citizens throughout the country and in the State of Pennsylvania who have written or talked to me on this subject. I am submitting them solely for the purpose of getting committee reaction to them. The questions are as follows:

1. On what basis is it possible for Congress, the President, or any tribunal of international law to determine the line of demarcation between the so-called munitions of war and other supplies?

2. If "munitions of war" be interpreted as limited to specific items without regard to the collateral aid found in those not so listed, what assurance do we have that we are maintaining a neutral position?

3. If all of our exports are regarded as munitions of war, would their prohibition from world markets by any official act of the United States be considered as the maintenance of a neutral position when it is obvious that some countries are more dependent upon shipments from us than are others?

4. If we determine to trade with all countries in time of war on the cash-and-carry basis, what assurance do we have that such policy on our part will not bring the instrumentalities of battle immediately to our own shores just outside the 3-mile limit?

5. What do we propose to do about the maintenance of the 3-mile limit as regards military aviation?

6. Does not the tremendous advantage which a few nations hold in commercial transport and credit facilities give them the virtual control of any sales transacted by us on the cash-and-carry basis to the exclusion of nations lacking these facilities? Can such action be held as a neutral position?

7. Does the past history of our Nation indicate the possibility of isolating ourselves from general wars where naval combat is extensive, and does the increased nearness of our country to the rest of the world by virtue of modern inventions give any support to this contention?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

There being no objection, the letter and the questions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., January 7, 1937.

Hon. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The Kiwanis Club of Pittsburgh, by a vote of a majority of its members at a regular meeting held this day, has directed me to write to you as follows:

Commerce between American nationals and the nationals or the government of a nation at war with another nation or with either of the warring factions of a nation where a civil war is in progress carries the danger of breaches of neutrality and temptation for this country to enter such conflict.

It is the firm belief of the membership of this club that all traffic of that kind should be on a strictly cash basis, deliveries to be made only to foreign-owned ships at American ports.

We do not believe it to be the duty of the United States to attempt to control shipments of so-called munitions of war or any other supplies. To one nation, a supply of raw cotton; to another nation, raw copper; to another, raw wheat; to another nation, some raw material only remotely connected with munitions of war, may be the deciding factor in a closely drawn conflict. We believe that it is not the duty of the United States Government to pass upon the propriety of shipping any raw or manufactured product of this country to a belligerent. But we do believe that the suggested plan of cash payments and delivery at the shore line to foreign ships is the best method of insuring the neutrality of this country in wars involving other than American nations or factions of nations that are at war, and we therefore most respectfully urge you to take the lead in an attempt to make this the fixed policy of the United States in such matters.

Very respectfully,

KIWANIS CLUB OF PITTSBURGH,
JOHN H. BRADFUTE, President.

ADJUSTMENT OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' SALARIES

Mr. McCARRAN. I introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Civil Service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Because of the importance of the bill, I ask that it be printed in full in the RECORD, and I also ask that a letter from Dr. Meriam, of the Brookings Institution, be printed in the RECORD following the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 741) to amend the act of March 4, 1923, entitled "An act to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and within the field services, and amendments thereto" was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Civil Service, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

SECTION 1. That to provide a more effective means of regulating and controlling the compensation of employees of the National Government, the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended by this and prior acts, are extended to all civilian positions in the field services and establishments of the Government, subject to the limitations, conditions, and amendments herein contained.

SEC. 2. This act shall not apply to any of the positions specifically excluded from the Classification Act by section 2 thereof, whether located in the District of Columbia or in the field, nor to any of the following positions in the Government Printing Office, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved June 7, 1924 (U. S. C., title 44, sec. 40); positions of Foreign Service officers in the Foreign Service of the Department of State, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved May 24, 1924 (U. S. C., title 22, sec. 3); positions of commercial attachés, assistant commercial attachés, trade commissioners, and assistant trade commissioners in the Foreign Commerce Service of the Department of Commerce, the compensation of which is fixed under an act of Congress approved March 3, 1927 (U. S. C., Supp. 3, title 15, sec. 197b); nor to positions the duties of which are to perform or assist in apprentice, helper, or journeymen work in a recognized trade or craft or to perform the work of a skilled or an unskilled laborer or to serve as an officer or a member of the crew of a vessel: Provided, however, That positions the duties of which are to perform the work of a skilled, a semiskilled, or a common laborer in the regular custody, operation, or maintenance of a Government building or other Government property, or in work which is subordinate, incidental, or preparatory to work of a professional, scientific, or technical character, may be included if the salaries and wages of said positions have been customarily determined through the same general procedure that has been followed in determining the salaries and wages of other employees in the establishments in which they are employed.

SEC. 3. If the Civil Service Commission finds a position, or class of positions, which may not fairly and reasonably be allocated to grades within the compensation schedules contained in the Classification Act, as amended, it shall prescribe such additional services and grades of said services as it may deem necessary and shall fix the range of compensation for said services and grades so that the compensation shall be comparable with that in the compensation schedules of the Classification Act, as amended, for positions that are comparable as to qualifications, duties, and conditions of labor: Provided, however, That such additional compensation schedules prepared by the Civil Service Commission shall not be put into effect until they have been approved by the President, and that the Civil Service Commission shall make to Congress as soon as practicable a full and complete report of its action taken in pursuance of the authority contained in this section of the act.

SEC. 4. The Civil Service Commission is hereby authorized, after suitable investigation, which shall include consultation with the heads of departments in which such positions are located, to exclude from the compensation schedules of the Classification Act, as amended: Positions or work which is financed jointly by the United States and a State, county, or municipality, or cooperating persons or organizations outside the Federal service, the pay of which is fixed under a cooperative agreement with the United States; positions none or only part of the compensation of which is paid from the funds of the United States; positions filled by inmates, patients, students, or beneficiaries in Government institutions; positions outside the continental United States filled by native citizens or foreign nationals, the rates for which should be governed by local standards; emergency, seasonal, or other positions the duties of which are of purely temporary duration or which are required only for brief periods at intervals; and positions filled by persons employed locally on a fee, contract, or piecework basis who may lawfully perform their duties concurrently with their private profession, business, or other employment, and whose duties require only a portion of their time, where it is impracticable to ascertain or anticipate the proportion of time devoted to the service of the United States. If the Civil Service Commission excludes any such positions from the compensation schedules, it may recommend to the heads of the departments in which such positions are located the procedure which it believes should be followed in fixing the compensation of said positions and the rate of compensation which it believes should be paid. If the Civil Service Commission makes such recommendations to a head of a department and if they are not adopted by the head of the department in a way deemed by the Commission to be satisfactory, the Commission shall report the facts to the President and to Congress.

SEC. 5. In accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed in advance by the Civil Service Commission, the heads of each and every department and agency shall, immediately upon the passage of this act, adjust the compensations of all its employees included within the terms of this act, so that said compensation conforms with the schedule of salaries established in the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. In accordance with said rules and regulations prescribed by the Civil Service Commission, the head of each department and independent agency shall report to the Civil Service Commission the duties and responsibilities of each such employee, his compensation immediately prior to the passage of this act, and the new rate of compensation fixed in accordance with the terms of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Civil Service Commission shall review the action of the heads of departments and independent establishments in fixing salaries in accordance with this act, and shall approve or disapprove said action. If it disapprove, it shall itself fix the rate of compensation, which rate shall thereafter be the lawful rate.

SEC. 6. If the Civil Service Commission shall determine at any time that the rates of the compensation schedules of the Classification Act, as amended, are inadequate for positions having the characteristics described below, it is hereby authorized, after consultation with the heads of departments, and subject to the approval of the President, to establish on account of such characteristics necessary schedules of differentials or adjustments in the rates prescribed in such compensation schedules, but the differential in the compensation of any such position shall not exceed 25 percent of the minimum rate of the class to which such position is allocated under such compensation schedules; positions whose duties and responsibilities cause them to fall within the compensation schedules, but which are located at stations which are isolated, remote, or inaccessible when compared with stations at which positions of the same class are usually located, or which involve physical hardships or hazards which are excessive when compared with those usually involved in positions of the same class or occupation, or which are located outside the continental limits of the United States: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall preclude the Civil Service Commission from taking the factor of isolation, hardship, hazard, or foreign service into consideration in allocating a given class to a service and grade under the compensation schedules herein if it is uniformly involved in each position in the class, in which event no adjustment is authorized under this section in the rate so determined.

SEC. 7. Allocations to grade and classes shall be made in accordance with section 4 of the Classification Act and initial compensation shall be fixed in accordance with section 6 of said act, except that if an employee is receiving compensation in excess of the maximum rate prescribed for the appropriate class no change shall be made in the existing compensation, but the position shall be correctly allocated and when it becomes vacant the compensation attached thereto shall be brought within the compensation schedule.

SEC. 8. Sections 7 and 9 of the Classification Act of 1923 are hereby repealed, and it shall no longer be mandatory for the departments to operate and for the Civil Service Commission to review and revise uniform systems of efficiency ratings for positions covered by this act and the Classification Act of 1923. The Civil Service Commission, in consultation with representatives of the heads of departments concerned, may ascertain to what extent it is practicable to determine and record the quantity and quality of the work of employees in the different classes of positions under this act and to secure and record other information that will permit of an evaluation of said work; and if the Commission deems such ascertaining and recording practicable and desirable, it may, subject to the approval of the President, require it and prescribe how and to what extent such records shall be used in adjusting compensation. Whenever such a system of service records is maintained and used in connection with salary adjustments, the current records shall be open to inspection by representatives of the Civil Service Commission and by employees of the department, under conditions to be determined by the Civil Service Commission.

SEC. 9. If the Civil Service Commission, with the approval of the President, requires and supervises a system for ascertaining and recording the quantity and quality of an employee's work and directs that said system alone shall be used in determining, within the salary ranges established, the exact salary rate at which an employee with a specified work record shall be compensated, the employee's salary may, at any time, be adjusted to said rate in accordance with his work record, and he shall be demoted or dropped from the service if he fails for a period of 6 consecutive months to maintain the minimum standard of performance thus fixed by the Commission.

If the Civil Service Commission deems it impracticable to maintain such records for a given class or to make such records the sole basis for determining the exact salary rate within the salary range established for the class, an employee whose position is allocated to said class may be advanced to the next higher rate within the range of the class to which his position is allocated at the end of each year of service until he has reached the maximum rate for said class, provided the head of the department certifies in each instance that said employee has rendered faithful and efficient service warranting such advance. If the head of the department is unable so to certify, he or his official representative shall give the employee, in writing, a statement of those deficiencies in the work or conduct of said employee that necessitates withholding the increment in salary, lowering the compensation within the range for the class, demoting the employee to a lower class, or removing the employee from the service. Insofar as practicable, the employee whose record is unsatisfactory shall be notified at least 60 days in advance of any such proposed disciplinary action and be afforded a fair and reasonable opportunity to correct his deficiencies.

The letter presented by Mr. MCCARRAN to accompany the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BROOKINGS INSTITUTION,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1937.

Hon. PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Dr. Moulton, the president of the Brookings Institution, has referred to me for attention and reply your letter of January 9, asking for our comments on the rough draft of a bill which you have prepared to adjust upward the salaries of those Government employees whose salary incomes are below $3,600.

As I explained to you informally over the telephone, here at the Brookings Institution we have never attempted to advise the Congress or the committees with respect to what the salaries or the salary levels should be, partly because we have not made the detailed economic and statistical studies required for specific recommendations on that subject, but more generally because the questions involved are of broad legislative policy which the Congress itself must answer. We have, however, been very glad to consider questions regarding the methods and devices for fixing salaries so that they will be related to the duties and responsibilities of the several classes of positions and so that throughout the service the principle of like pay for like work may be practically applied.

I have examined the rough draft of the proposed bill from the standpoint of methods and devices. I find that in drafting it you have given very careful consideration not only to existing salary standardization or classification law but also to proposals for the extension of that legislation that has been presented to the Congress after thorough investigation and study. It seems to me that your proposed bill has recognized the points that have to be covered in such legislation and has made excellent provision for meeting the various situations. To be a little more specific, your section 1 extends the Classification Act, as amended, to the field services and establishments, subject to certain necessary limitations, conditions, and amendments. I have always regarded such extension as the next great step forward in salary standardization in the Federal service. It was yesterday recommended to Congress in the message and report on reorganization submitted by the President.

Your section 2 excludes from the operation of the act not only the groups of positions for which special legislation has been passed but also "positions the duties of which are to perform or assist in apprentice, helper, or journeyman work in a recognized trade or craft", the latter with minor exceptions already recognized in existing law. That section adequately meets one of the difficulties in this type of legislation.

Sections 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 deal with the detailed techniques of classification, salary standardization, and allocations. They seem to me to embody the best of the experience to date.

Section 8 repealing the existing mandatory requirements for uniform systems of efficiency rating and substituting a permissive system seems to me to be in the interests of good, realistic personnel administration, in that it recognizes the fact that the extent to which efficiency rating is practicable and worth while varies with the nature of the duties and responsibilities of the several classes of positions. The first part of section 9 that permits employees engaged on duties measurable as to quantity and quality of output to advance in pay as their production advances appeals to me as sound. It offers an incentive to the employees, and my own experience with this type of work has convinced me that the best employees are the cheapest.

Personally, I approve of the latter part of this section that permits advancement within the salary rate for the grade at the rate of one step a year until the maximum is reached, provided the employee has rendered faithful and efficient service. I particularly like the provision that employees whose service is not regarded as faithful and efficient and as warranting advancement shall be so notified in writing. If each department, independent establishment, and major bureau has a competent personnel officer who follows carefully the record of each employee, the proposed section will in my judgment improve materially the output of the employees. This section requires first-class administration by the departmental officials and especially by the personnel officers. Effectively used by them it will give maximum results in efficiency. It is, of course, subject to abuse but I know of no way in which the danger of abuse can be eliminated without at the same time restricting the operating officers from promptly rewarding faithful and efficient service. I think the answer is first-class personnel officers in every organization.

Your section 11 dealing with the methods for adjusting rates upon the introduction of the new salary schedules should I think be submitted, if that is permissible, to the Acting Comptroller General to see how he will interpret it if it is enacted into law. The alternative to it is a definite detailed schedule actually applying the principle you have laid down in the present draft. Such a schedule would be a bit long and cumbersome, and I should prefer your briefer provision if I could be sure that it would be applied in just the way I interpret it. In section 10 you have met the difficulty of giving material advances to those in the lowest grades of the subprofessional, clerical, administrative, and fiscal and custodial services by reducing the number of salary steps within the salary range. It seems to me that the introduction of a minimum wage at the bottom makes the course you have pursued the practical one. There never has been, to my knowledge, any fundamental principle that required six steps above the entrance rate for all grades and I think they are inapplicable where a relatively high entrance rate is used. Since you have reduced the number of steps in certain grades the adjustment to the new steps is more difficult and I should like to know in advance how the Comptroller General's Office would interpret the language of the bill.

If I can be of any service to you in connection with classification legislation please let me know.

Very sincerely yours,

LEWIS MERIAM.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—LAWS AND TREATIES

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 60), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs is hereby authorized to have prepared for the use of the Senate, a compilation of the laws, agreements, Executive orders, proclamations, etc., relating to Indian affairs passed and proclaimed since March 4, 1927, including the Seventy-fifth Congress, to be known as "Laws and Treaties Relating to Indian Affairs, Volume 5."

INVESTMENTS OF FOREIGN CAPITAL

Mr. KING. I submit a resolution which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Because of its importance, I ask that the resolution may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be received, printed in the RECORD, and referred as requested by the Senator from Utah.

The resolution (S. Res. 61) was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

Whereas there are large capital exports from foreign countries into the United States which have resulted in augmenting gold holdings in the Treasury of the United States; and

Whereas much of such capital is employed in the acquisition of American securities, including stocks and bonds of private corporations; and

Whereas it is alleged that such foreign capital so invested in the United States affects prices and tends to inflation; and

Whereas it is claimed that the revenue laws of the United States discriminate in favor of the holders of foreign capital to the disadvantage of American investors; and

Whereas it is claimed that the sudden withdrawal of such capital would result in the withdrawal of large gold holdings in the Treasury of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make an investigation for the purpose of ascertaining (a) the amount of foreign capital invested in the United States, the character of the investments, the amount of gold brought into the United States by nonresidents for the purpose of capital investment, and the effect of such foreign investments in the United States upon domestic prices and upon the business and economic structure of our country; (b) whether or not the tax laws of the United States unduly favor such foreign investors, and the general effect of such investments in the United States upon our domestic policies; (c) the amount of investments in foreign countries by citizens of the United States, the effect of such investments upon the economic and business life of the countries in which such investments are made, and the forms of taxation to which such investments are subjected; and (d) the probable effects with respect to governmental regulation by foreign countries of the investments of citizens of the United States in such foreign countries which might result from the enactment of legislation by Congress with respect to foreign capital in the United States. The committee shall report to the Senate as soon as practicable the result of its investigations, together with its recommendations for such legislation as it deems necessary.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-fifth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

COUNTING OF ALIENS IN APPORTIONMENT OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have today reintroduced a proposal (S. J. Res. 40) to amend the Constitution of the United States so that in apportioning Representatives in the National House of Representatives aliens who have not completed their naturalization shall not be counted.

The Constitution now provides that in apportioning Representatives among the States the whole number of persons shall be counted, excluding only Indians not taxed. The effect of this is to give States with large alien populations additional representation in the popular branch of Congress, at the expense of those States whose population is largely made up of native-born and naturalized citizens.

According to the latest census figures, there are some 14,000,000 foreign-born persons in the United States. Of these nearly 8,000,000 are naturalized citizens. These would be counted if the amendment I am proposing should be submitted to the States and should be ratified.

There are more than 1,000,000 of these foreign born who have taken out first papers; these would not be counted under the terms of my amendment until they had taken out final citizenship papers. After that they would be counted the same as are native-born Americans.

The census also shows some 4,500,000 foreign born who have made no move toward becoming citizens, plus one-half million carried in the census reports as having no citizenship records at all.

In other words, there are about 6,000,000 foreign born in this country, not citizens, who are accounted in apportioning Representatives in Congress. In one State alone, New York, there are nearly 1,500,000 foreign-born persons who are not citizens, but who were allowed representation in Congress. If my amendment were a part of the Constitution, admittedly that State would have probably four fewer Representatives in Congress, and those four seats would go to other States, and very properly so.

I may mention in passing that the State of New York, with such a large foreign-born, unnaturalized alien population, does not allow them to be counted in apportioning members of their own State legislature or assembly, thereby admitting the injustice of basing representation upon such foreign-born residents unless and until they have become citizens. A few other States would be similarly affected.

I do not intend to take up the time of the Senate today to discuss this proposal at greater length. It seems to me so perfectly plain that representation should be based upon citizenship as not to require extended argument. Later in the session, when the proposal comes before the Senate, as I expect it to come, with a favorable committee report, I shall discuss it at greater length. I hope Senators will take occasion to study the merits of the proposal, and vote accordingly.

CONTINUATION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably, unanimously, and without amendment, the bill (S. 415) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 2) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia desire present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GLASS. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the request is subject to a point of order, because it flies in the face of the rule that a bill must go to the calendar and lie over for a day. At this time I am not going to raise that objection. However, this morning I was talking to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who has an amendment to offer, as I understand. I shall withhold objection until that amendment is disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is whether there is objection to the present consideration of the bill. If unanimous consent is given for its consideration, then any Senator may offer any amendment that is in order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask before the request is passed on, is this a measure continuing the act as it now exists?

Mr. GLASS. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I may state that at this time there is no business on the calendar. Many committees of the Senate are at work. As everyone knows, next week there will be little opportunity for the consideration of legislative matters. If this measure could be disposed of today, it would be practicable, so far as I am now informed, to adjourn or recess until Monday. If the bill goes over, as it must under the rule if objection is made to its present consideration, it will probably be necessary to have a session tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. I am not insisting on the objection at this time. I should like to have the amendment considered before unanimous consent is given for the consideration of the bill itself, or to have an opportunity to confer with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to ascertain if he has arrived at an agreement with his colleague in regard to the amendment proposing a modification of the bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the matter be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BYRD. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard. The bill will go to the calendar.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 14, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for Thy merciful gifts, so rich and bountiful, for the friendships which stir our affections, for the memories of the past with their melodies, for the joy of living, and for the hope of the years. Gracious Father, we would renew our allegiance to Thee and to our country. Let Thy blessing be upon us as a people; grant that the happiness of all may be the object of each. Bring us to the realization that it is better to give than to receive and better to serve than to be served. Blessed Lord, as these days are perilous with contagion, we pray Thee to keep our Speaker and the Congress in Thy nurturing care. We beseech Thee to preserve the health of their bodies and the vigor of their minds. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, in the name and in behalf of the common people of this country—the people who have to fight and die; to have their homes wrecked and their heartstrings torn asunder in war—I arise today to paint a vivid but true picture of threatened world war and to urge my colleagues at the opening of the Seventy-fifth Congress to take immediate steps to keep America from being drawn into the deluge.

I think I understand the spirit of the common people on this proposition of war. I thank God I was born a commoner. I thank God that from my youth I have been accustomed to hard and grueling toil. I thank God that there have been times when I have gone hungry. I thank God that work and distress and hardships and disappointments—the common lot in life—have taught me the meaning of the term "the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God." It is a comfort and a satisfaction to me that I am from, and of, the common people—the people whom Lincoln said that God must love since He made so many of them—because my place among them enables me to interpret accurately, I think, the hopes and aspirations of those who travel the common walks of life.

And if ever I prayed to God Almighty to give me the gift of expression I pray for it today, because I want to make perfectly clear and understandable what the common people of America are thinking on the subject of war. They are thinking this: They are thinking that they love their country and that they would pour out the last drop of their blood, if necessary, to defend it from attack or invasion by a foreign foe, but they are bitterly denouncing and resenting the idea that if a world war comes their sons shall be conscripted and sent away to die in foreign slaughter pens in the settlement of quarrels of other nations.

Furthermore, the common people are tired of being eternally the buffer in the game of war, and since they have to do the suffering and the dying, and to furnish war's cannon fodder, they are asking why they should not have something to say as to whether war shall be declared. They are asking why a question so tragic in its nature, so intimately interwoven with life and death, which involves the very existence as well as the welfare and happiness of the millions of our people, should not be submitted to the people for decision in a national referendum.

Mr. Speaker, are we, who occupy the seats of authority, willing to sit idly by while the deadly train of events on the world's stage moves ever onward, drawing our precious young men closer, closer, and closer to the holocaust of war, to be mown down by machine guns; to be blown to bits by bombs rained from the air; to be horribly strangled by poison gases or perhaps to die an agonizing death from disease germs hellishly spawned in foreign laboratories? Are we willing to say to the fathers and mothers of America that we intend to loaf along and do nothing while their sons are being sucked into the vortex of another foreign war, to die like sheep in a shambles?

These are questions that appeal to the conscience of every Member of this House as we begin the work of a new Congress. They are questions that ought to stir us tremendously and incite us to the highest aims of love and duty. If we are sincere in our humanitarian professions these questions should interest us to the exclusion of all things else. If there is burning in our hearts as much as a spark of the glow that was lighted at Bethlehem, over nineteen hundred years ago, we will not fumble or hesitate or temporize. We will do our humble, but, let us hope effective, part to bring about "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

Legislation to stabilize peace and to prevent our young men from being dragged into slaughter pens in foreign countries should be the very first consideration of the Congress of the United States as it reassembles in the Capital of our Nation.

WORLD IS SPEEDING TOWARD WAR

The Seventy-fifth Congress meets amidst world conditions of the most ominous and unsettled nature. Where is the patriot who, as he surveys the world picture, does not shudder for the peace and security of America amid such uncertain and precarious surroundings? Bald, stark naked civil war is raging in one country, threatening to drag into its maelstrom at least two and possibly four great powers at any moment and thus set the whole world aflame. War broods over three-quarters of the globe. Governments everywhere are going centripetal at an amazing rate. Since the world war—which was supposed to be a war to end war—19 democracies have died and the liberties of the people have died with them. What a sad spectacle of fallen democracies! Today dictators, mad with lust for power and economic advantages, are thrumming the strings of war and preparing for another mass slaughter.

It is almost the universal opinion of experts on international affairs that we are headed straight toward another general war which, if it comes, with all of the modern death-dealing inventions, will be the most awful calamity that can be imagined. The very thought of what the next war will be like, with its cornucopia of horrors, its refinements of cruelty based on the amazing progress that has been made in the development of scientific war-making processes, its aerial bombardments raining death from the skies, its lethal gases and disease germs produced with satanic ingenuity to torture and kill by wholesale civilians as well as the fighting forces, staggers the imagination, blinds the intellect, and sickens the heart of long suffering humanity.

The conclusion of all qualified witnesses who came before the Senate Munitions Investigating Committee—a conclusion that runs like a sad and prophetic refrain through the entire sordid testimony—is that if another world war comes it will destroy civilization and wreck the world. The witnesses who so testified should be credible witnesses, because they deal with the implements of death.

SECRETARY HULL'S WISE ADMONITION

It is no wonder that Secretary of State Hull, speaking to the dignitaries assembled at Buenos Aires just before Christmas, said:

> We must destroy war or war will destroy us.

These are not the words of a radical or an alarmist. They are the words of one of the most clear-thinking, sound-thinking statesmen in the world today. They are the words of a man of world vision who is on the watchtower at the head of our great department of Government that deals with our foreign relations.

I cannot refrain from quoting one more paragraph from the speech of Secretary Hull to the South American statesmen, because I think it is so clearly applicable to the Congress of the United States now assembled in the city of Washington.

> Those who sit in the masters' seats and shape the destinies of other men—> are under the most imperative of mandates to leave no course which may avoid war unexplored. The real patriots and the real heroes of the future will be the leaders who find and follow the road to peace.

He said—

What a wonderfully clear statement of the solemn duty now resting upon the statesmen whom I am addressing in these legislative halls!

War with its agonies of death and separations, with its insufferable burdens of cost, with its dislocation of everything that makes for normal happiness, is today humanity's cross and anything we may do, even in a small way, to lift that cross certainly is commendable and praiseworthy.

BOTH PARTY PLATFORMS FOR PEACE

In this critical hour I am not inclined to indulge in any useless jeremiads over what we shall, or shall not do, to meet this situation. I have faith to believe that, somehow or other, Congress will arise to the sublime heights of its responsibility. I believe this more and more as every day brings to me fresh evidence of the peace sentiment that pervades the country and of the willingness of Members of Congress to heed that sentiment. America is today in the surges of a peace movement that reached high tide when our two great political conventions this year adopted platform planks in harmony with the public trend. At Cleveland the Republicans said:

> We pledge ourselves to promote and maintain peace by all honorable means not leading to foreign alliances or political commitments.

At Philadelphia the Democrats said:

> We reaffirm our opposition to war as an instrument of national policy, and declare that disputes between nations should be settled by peaceful means. We shall continue to observe a true neutrality in the disputes of others; to be prepared, resolutely, to resist aggression against ourselves; to work for peace, and to take the profit out of war; to guard against being drawn by political commitments, international banking, or private trading, into any war which may develop anywhere.

We meet, therefore, in the Seventy-fifth Congress with both parties pledged to peace legislation in harmony with the public demand and with the Democratic Party and its enormous majority definitely committed to legislation taking the profits out of war.

STATING THE CASE FOR THE PEACE AMENDMENT

So with this setting intimately related to and interwoven with all human values, directly confronting us, I come before you today to explain a proposed peace amendment which I have long advocated; which I have reintroduced in the new Congress and for which I invite your sympathetic interest and support, as I sincerely believe it is the best peace proposal on the national horizon. It was given the name "Peace Amendment" by Good Housekeeping, a magazine with some millions of women readers, which is ardently supporting it. As a prelude to further discussion of the subject I should like at this time to read the text of my proposed constitutional amendment, as follows:

> SECTION 1. Except in the event of an invasion of the United States or its territorial possessions and attack upon its citizens residing therein, the authority of Congress to declare war shall not become effective until confirmed by a majority of all votes cast thereon in a Nation-wide referendum. Congress, when it deems a national crisis to exist, may by concurrent resolution refer the question of war or peace to the citizens of the States, the question to be voted on being "Shall the United States declare war on ----------?" Congress may otherwise by law provide for the enforcement of this section.
> SEC. 2. Whenever war is declared the President shall immediately conscript and take over for use by the Government all the public and private war properties, yards, factories, and supplies, fixing the compensation for private properties temporarily employed for war purposes at a rate not in excess of 4 per centum, based on tax values assessed in the year preceding the war.

[Applause.]

The war referendum resolution I propose has sunk deep into the consciousness of America. Please indulge me while I recount some of the elements of support that have been attracted to it:

First. The 21 railroad brotherhoods, comprising the flower of organized labor. They approved it at a special meeting held in Washington for that purpose.

Second. The American War Mothers, comprising the mothers of our soldiers of the late war. Meeting in Washington they approved it unanimously.

Third. The Church of the Disciples of Christ, by action taken in their international convention last year at San Antonio and again this year at Kansas City. This denomination has 7,648 churches and 1,377,595 communicants in America.

Fourth. Archbishops Curley, McNicholas, and Droessaerts, and many bishops of the Catholic Church.

Fifth. Rabbis Stephen Wise, Israel, Goldstein, Feuerlicht, and many other rabbis and leaders of the Jewish people.

Sixth. Leaders of all Protestant denominations and church organizations and groups too numerous to mention.

Seventh. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union as a national organization, with all State organizations cooperating. At Tulsa this year the national W. C. T. U. took action approving the resolution and throwing its support back of the proposed constitutional amendment.

Eighth. Sixty-five presidents of universities and colleges.

Ninth. Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, coauthor of the Pact of Paris, and Hon. A. B. Houghton, former Ambassador to Germany and England.

Tenth. Seventy-two Members of the House of Representatives, representing over 18,000,000 people, have given their written pledges to the resolution by signing the discharge petition at the last session of Congress.

Besides these pillars of support countless thousands of individuals and groups, large and small, have expressed approval. That it is in harmony with what the people are thinking is indicated by the poll conducted by the Institute of Public Opinion recently which showed 71 percent of the people—81 percent of the women—in favor of a war referendum.

As this proposed peace amendment embodies two substantive propositions I am willing that it be divided and considered in the form of two separate House joint resolutions. Let us now consider these two propositions.

REVERENCE FOR CONSTITUTION

At the outset I want to say that I hold the Constitution in the highest reverence as the sheet anchor of our liberties and the arch stone of our public welfare, and I will never be a party to amending it for any light and inconsequential causes. When I propose an amendment to the Constitution, particularly one dealing with so important a matter as the exercise of the war power, I realize that the burden of proof is on me to show that the Constitution should be so amended.

What, then, are some of the defects of the present constitutional method of declaring war? What is there about the existing constitutional method of declaring war that makes it a menace to peace? Let us analyze the situation. Under the existing constitutional mechanism war is declared by Congress; that is to say, by a majority of each branch. There are 435 members of the House and 96 Senators, and war may be declared by 218 Representatives and 49 Senators, a total of 267 individuals, while about 127,000,000 other people have nothing to say about it. Thus we find the war power vested in a very little group in Washington, a group that is singularly influenced and dominated by one other individual, the other individual being whoever may happen at any given time to occupy the office of President of the United States.

MEMBERS OF CONGRESS ARE HUMAN

I would be the last person in the world to cast aspersions on Members of Congress. For 36 years as a newspaper correspondent and a representative I have lived among them and I have a good opinion of their average patriotism and capacity. It is a high average. But when the war pressure from a thousand directions is on and the heat is applied and the propaganda is in full swing, Members of Congress are likely to crack under the strain and vote for war when they would not want to do so. Members of Congress are, after all, human. No Member wants to be called "yellow" and no Member wants to be seared and burned by the opprobrious epithet of "traitor." It is not fair to Members of Congress to ask them or to expect them to vote on a declaration of war. This most vital of all questions should be decided not by the agent but by the principal, and in this case the principal is the 127,000,000 people who comprise the American Nation. In the way provided in my resolution the agent will advise the principal, but the principal will act. As war is now declared, the agent acts and the principal has nothing to say about it. Under the proposed plan the question of war or peace will be decided exactly as it should be decided, with every citizen casting his vote in the privacy of the ballot booth, alone with his Maker, and the majority of all ballots will be the verdict of the combined judgment and conscience of America. With the millions upon millions of God-fearing citizens deciding this great question by ballot the wiles of Machiavellian schemers will be of no avail and the shafts of the wicked will break and fall. Ulterior influences cannot reach and tamper with that jury.

ILLUSTRATIONS OF VARIOUS "PRESSURES"

Let us try to visualize just a few of the myriad of influences and pressures that may now be brought to bear on Congress to force a declaration of war—influences and pressures which might be effective on Congress but which would be wholly ineffective if applied to the Nation under the war referendum system.

Illustration No. 1: Senator John Smith has a brother who is president of a large munitions company. The brother has visions of enormous bonuses certain to come to him if war is declared. If Senator Smith were a judge assigned to try a case under such circumstances he would be expected to disqualify himself, but as a Senator he is under no such compulsion and he will have a vote on the declaration of war.

Illustration No. 2: Representative John Brown owes a large sum of money to the home bank at Smithville, his loan being subject to call. The Smithville bank is affiliated with a great big bank in New York which belongs to a ring of international financiers. The New York bank and its associates are promoting the war movement. It says to its Smithville correspondent: "Take care of Congressman Brown and see that he votes right on the declaration of war."

Illustration No. 3: War clouds are gathering over America and, let us say, Japan. A break appears imminent. During the week immediately following the time set for a vote in Congress on a war resolution the congressional convention will be held in Congressman John Jones' district, and Congressman Jones is a candidate to succeed himself. Without the support of the Sharpsville Bugle, the leading newspaper of his political faith in the district, John Jones could not get within a thousand miles of the nomination. The Bugle is violently anti-Japanese, and is demanding that Representative Jones vote for war.

Illustration No. 4: With the war declaration pending in Congress the Legislature of the State of New York meets, and in its assumed capacity to speak for the people of that sovereign State, it adopts a resolution in the form of a memorial demanding that the New York delegation in Congress, 2 Senators and 45 Representatives, shall vote for war. The action of the legislature is unanimous. The vote of the New York delegation in Congress is numerically equal to the combined votes of many other States. If it is cast as directed from Albany it will tip the scales in favor of war. It is known that ulterior influences were very busy around Albany before the legislature took action.

These are but instances of many forms of pressure to which Congress may be subjected in war times. A thousand other illustrations could be given of special pressures that might be brought to bear on Congress to force a declaration of war, influences which could not possibly be brought to bear on the country at large in a referendum on war. If the decision of war or peace were left to all of the people of the country the action of the New York Legislature would not have an effect altogether out of proportion to its actual importance. It might have a little influence on the great national jury but it assuredly would not be a determining factor in the result. The Sharpsville Bugle might bugle to its heart's content but its raucous calls would hardly swing a nation.

There is no desire or intent in this recital of just a few of the ulterior influences that may now operate to defeat the popular will, to speculate on how John Smith, John Brown, John Jones, and the New York delegation would vote on a declaration of war. Giving to all of them the credit of being honest, sincere, and patriotic men who will see their duty and do it, nevertheless it must be obvious to everybody that such a system of declaring war is all wrong.

DANGER THAT TYRANT WILL GRAB WAR POWER

Now let me call your attention to another defect in our existing constitutional war-making mechanism which I believe is far more serious than anything I have mentioned and that is the opportunity it would give to a tyrant in the White House to plunge the Nation into war at any time to pursue his selfish aims or for his own aggrandizement.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I will yield to my friend the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. As the sole surviving Member of the Sixty-fifth Congress who voted against war I am intensely interested in what the gentleman is saying. I am in close sympathy with what he seeks to accomplish. I am satisfied that if we had had such a provision in the Consitution in 1917, America never would have gone to war. We never would have had the depression with all the wreckage left in its wake.

I want to appeal to my colleagues on this side of the House to sign the petition which I assume the gentleman will shortly file without loss of time, because it is most imperative in view of the world situation today that we take every precaution to prevent America from being dragged into another world war as it seems it is being slowly dragged into. I think it is obligatory on every Member of this House to sign the petition.

Mr. LUDLOW. I want to thank the gentleman from Minnesota for his contribution, which is very kind and much appreciated.

I have already said that the tendency of governments all around the world is to go centripetal at an amazing rate, also that 19 democracies have died since the world war and with them have died the hopes and aspirations of the common people of those countries. Centralization is the order of governmental development everywhere. Too often all power is being centralized in tyrants who play with the lives of their subjects as they would with so many toys, moving them here, there and yonder on war's checkerboard, using them as cannon-fodder without the slightest regard for humane considerations.

CENTRALIZATION OF POWER

In our own country we have not escaped the trend toward centralization of authority. I hold before me a list of 77 major laws that were passed by the Seventy-second and Seventy-third Congresses. Of these, 18 originated in Congress and 59 originated in the executive departments. I mention this trend of executive influence over Congress not in criticism, because executive leadership was necessary to bring our country out of the darkest night of economic distress and despair it ever has known, and an all-wise Providence was kind to America in furnishing one who was capable of that leadership, but if the man who happens at any given time to be President has so much influence over Congress in an economic emergency, less serious than war, to what lengths might not a tyrannical President go in usurping the war power and plunging America into war to satisfy his own whims? If we are to stabilize peace in America and do our part toward stabilizing the peace of the world we should decentralize the war power and vest it with the people themselves. That is where it ought to be. That is where sovereignty abides, and we should do this before it is everlastingly too late, before some tyrant makes his appearance in the White House. No stauncher friend of peace ever occupied the Executive Office than President Roosevelt, but, after all, the period of one president's service is but a second in the life of a nation and I shudder to think what might happen to our beloved country some time in the future if a tyrant of Napoleonic stripe should appear in the White House, grab the war power and run amuck.

As matters now stand, with the war power lodged where it is, such a tyrant would find the situation exactly to his liking. There would be nothing to prevent him from plunging America into war with half of the world.

President Woodrow Wilson well said that he had heard of governments making war on governments, but that in all the range of his observation he never knew "of peoples making war on peoples", and our present great Executive, Franklin D. Roosevelt, uttered a sentiment of cheer and inspiration to the human race around the world when he said that "war by governments" must give way to "peace by peoples." If in every country on the globe the war power could be democratized and vested with the people, war probably would almost vanish from the earth, for the people do not want war. They are sick of its heartaches, of its grief and suffering; of the pain it puts in the hearts of mothers. America has always been noted for its primacy as an exponent of righteousness and high ideals; and I ask to what greater cause could we dedicate ourselves than to assume the leadership in trying by precept and example to emancipate the human race from the curse of war.

TWO WAYS TO PREVENT WAR

There are two ways, as I conceive it, to prevent war or at least to minimize the possibility of our involvement in foreign wars. My proposed "Peace Amendment" covers both ways. One way is to give all the people—women as well as men—the right to vote on a declaration of war. And why should not women have that right? Women go down into the valley of the shadow of death to bring our boys into the world. Why should they not have something to say as to whether their flesh and blood shall be hurled into the hell of a foreign conflict? Of the 531 members of Congress at the present time, only six are women, so you see how utterly negligible is the prospect of giving expression to whatever may be women's viewpoint on any particular war proposal. The other way to prevent war is to take the profit out of war. Take the profit out of war and there will be few wars. My proposed peace amendment is based on the philosophy that those who have to suffer, and if need be to die, and to bear the awful burdens and heartaches of war, should have something to say as to whether war should be declared. What could be more elementally just than that?

WHY REFERENDUM WAS NOT IN ORIGINAL CONSTITUTION

Now, you may ask, if the existing method of declaring war is so imperfect and undependable as a means of registering the Nation's will in regard to war, why did the founding fathers adopt it at the beginning? Why was such a mechanism ever written into the Constitution? Why did not George Washington favor a war referendum? Why did not Thomas Jefferson, who wrote into the great Declaration the immortal doctrine that "all men are created equal" see to it that a provision for a popular vote on war was included in his cherished Bill of Rights? Pertinent and proper questions, all of these. Certainly no one doubts the breadth and depths of the altruism of the seers who founded this Republic. But far-seeing as they were, they could not foresee the development in the means of communication that has made a war referendum practicable. Acting in the light of their times they lodged the war-making power the nearest to the people it could be put under the conditions then existing—and that was in the Congress. There was great rejoicing among the friends of the people in the Constitutional Convention when they were able to defeat a movement to lodge the war power with the President, which was the aim of the monarchists of that time; and Thomas Jefferson in one of his letters spoke exultantly of that victory for the people. The only kind of representative government the founding fathers knew was representative government at its best, and when they got the war power vested in Congress they consoled themselves with the thought that it was lodged nearest to the people.

In those times the railroad, the telegraph, the telephone, the radio were in the bosom of the unknown future. Even the pony express was as yet undreamed of. A letter mailed on the eastern seaboard was 6 months reaching the uttermost frontiers of the country, if indeed it ever got there, and traveling was so tedious, long-drawn-out and precarious that Members of Congress were allowed mileage at the rate of 20 cents a mile to cover tavern bills, etc., on the long journey to Washington and return to their homes.

NOW IT IS DIFFERENT

Now the fast train roars across the country in 100 hours; the airplane in 24; the telegraph, telephone, and radio have annihilated time and space. The two great broadcasting systems gave me time over their networks to explain my peace amendment to the people of the country, and sitting before a microphone in Washington I talked to the entire Nation. The only tenable argument ever made against a war referendum, namely, that it would consume too much time, thus giving an enemy nation the advantage, has been completely nullified by modern perfection in the means of communication. On this subject Admiral McGowan, a great officer of the World War, gave expert testimony.

There seems—

He said—

to be a very general misapprehension as to the time required to hold a referendum. The United States has long since graduated out of the stagecoach and pony-express class, and there is no reason whatever why in this day of railroads and airplanes and telegraph and telephone and radio we could not refer the question of war or peace to the people of the country and have their answer back within a week—indeed, within 48 hours, if absolutely necessary.

This is the testimony of a great officer who was paymaster general of the United States Navy and head of the Bureau of Supplies in the world's greatest war, and who had a very practical vision of war problems. Since he testified, all of the agencies of transmitting the written and spoken word have been further developed so as to quicken communication, and in my opinion there is no longer the slightest reason to raise the time factor as an objection to a war referendum.

NOT A PACIFIST PROPOSITION

Now if any one, here or elsewhere, has jumped to the conclusion that the constitutional amendment I am advocating is a pacifist proposition, as the word pacifist is generally understood, I want to correct that impression. This proposition has nothing whatever to do with the size of our national defense. It goes only to the one point of deciding how the war-making power shall be exercised, whether by a little group or oligarchy in Washington or by the people who have to do the suffering and dying and who pay the bills. I believe it should be vested with the people. Personally I believe that with conditions in the world as they are today we must have strong and adequate national defense. The Constitution enjoins upon the Government the duty of protecting the national welfare. How can the national welfare be protected without an adequate Army and Navy to do it with?

OUR VAST WAR APPROPRIATIONS

While I want to see the Army and Navy kept at a satisfactory standard of efficiency I would like to see everything possible done by stabilizing the cause of peace to reduce our enormous war expenditures which are sapping the Nation and making our taxes mountain high. In this connection I wish to present some figures which I think will open your eyes. The last session of Congress, which ended on June 20, 1936, was 169 days in duration. The appropriations made at that session on account of wars past and preparation for wars to come, appropriations that had the support of members of both political parties because they were so integrated with the war problem that both parties felt impelled to support them, amounted to a grand total of $5,317,805,092—an amount of such magnitude that while it jingles in the ear it does not register on the mind. Of this stupendous sum $400,000,000 was to pay the interest on that part of the public debt created by war; $560,000,000 for retirement of war debt; $593,727,000 to compensate disabled soldiers through the Veterans' Administration, and so forth. Such debts, having been created by war, cannot be avoided.

WAR CONSUMES VALUE OF NINE STATES

To put the facts in concrete form, Congress at its last session, on account of wars past and preparation for wars to come, voted money for war purposes that wipe out or offset the total value of all real estate and improvements in nine States and about two-thirds of the value of all real estate and improvements in the District of Columbia to boot. Those nine States are New Hampshire, Vermont, Delaware, New Mexico, Nevada, Idaho, Wyoming, Arizona, and Utah. The total value of all real estate and improvements in those nine States is $4,612,995,000 or $704,810,092 less than the war appropriations of one short session of Congress. To state the case in another way, the war appropriations of this one short session exceed by $40,432,772 the total value of all real estate and improvements in the State of Indiana and the District of Columbia combined. We cannot have wars without paying for them and, as already stated, these appropriations were passed by the Representatives and Senators of both parties, so that no political issue was involved, but in the face of such staggering burdens of cost is it not time to pause and consider whither we are drifting?

WOULD LIFT US OUT OF MIASMAS OF WAR

I hope the peace amendment I have introduced will appeal to the sound judgment of my colleagues as they analyze it in the light of reason. It would not interfere in any way with the exercise of our right of self-defense but it would tend to lift us out of the miasmas and quicksands of war and the unholy concomitants of war. It would be a great and helpful factor in keeping us out of all foreign wars and out of all wars we should not enter.

Mr. McGROARTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to my friend the gentleman from California.

Mr. McGROARTY. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] intimated that you would file a petition for the consideration of your bill. To which committee has it been referred?

Mr. LUDLOW. The bill, I may say, was introduced in the last Congress and received the only reference it could have, to the Committee on the Judiciary, it being a constitutional question.

Mr. McGROARTY. Does the gentleman anticipate that the committee will refuse to report the bill out?

Mr. LUDLOW. The committee did not report it in the last Congress, and I have no intimation of any change in the prospect.

Mr. McGROARTY. Would the gentleman suggest that we appear before the committee?

Mr. LUDLOW. There were hearings in the last Congress on the merits of the proposition. What steps would be advisable to take now in regard to another hearing I cannot say.

Mr. McGROARTY. What I was getting at is this: To me it seems that there is too much of refusal of the committee to report out bills. I resent the committee holding up bills from the floor of the House and preventing Members from discussing them. I think there ought to be more liberality in the committee. As to the committees I am serving on, I shall certainly exercise my influence to report any bill out that should receive the attention of this House. I hope the Judiciary Committee will change its mind and report the gentleman's resolution out so that it can be debated on the floor of the House.

Mr. LUDLOW. I want to thank the gentleman for his valuable suggestion. I have the highest respect for the Committee on the Judiciary, and I join the gentleman from California in his hope that the resolution will be reported out. Certainly a measure that holds the heart interest of so many millions of people is entitled to a better fate than to be stifled in committee. If it is not reported out within the time limit provided in our rules, it is my purpose to file a discharge petition and to request Members of the House to join me in trying to effectuate action in that way. In doing so I will intend no offense to the Committee on the Judiciary, which includes in its membership many whom I am proud to number among my warm friends. As the gentleman from California has so well said, important measures such as this should not be strangled in committees. That is unfair and un-American. I do not believe the Judiciary Committee will insist on killing a bill that undoubtedly has the approval of many millions of our citizens.

As far as finite vision can discern, some wars appear to be foreordained and inescapable, as for instance the War of the American Revolution, which forged into our social structure great principles of right and justice. But some wars, and I think most wars, are not unavoidable. Most wars are caused by greed and ambition and hate and selfishness and are initiated by plots and machinations that are in the highest degree antisocial and antipathetic to every principle of humanity. It is to protect our children and our children's children and the America of posterity from such ungodly wars that the peace amendment is directed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MARTIN of Colorado). Under the special order the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 40 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I noted, of course, on the calendar that I would follow the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]. It immediately occurred to me that the gentleman from Indiana had made so many contributions that have been most valuable to the Congress I might well pay him high tribute. And, remembering some of the things he had formerly stated, I could well make use of them for my own purposes this afternoon.

Some of us are still fearful about a great many things. The gentleman from Indiana expressed what he is perhaps fearful of at the present. But back in 1927 Hon. Finis Garrett, leader of the Democratic Party, having noted a remarkable speech by the gentleman from Indiana, before he became a Member of the House—he was then, I believe, president of the National Press Association—saw fit to place it in the RECORD. And following today's remarks by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] and as a proper sequence to them, I wish to quote from that address, hoping that the gentleman feels exactly the same today:

> Those of us who spend our time watching the wheels of Government go around see a hydra-headed and vicious paternalism grown up in this country, which is touching every phase of life with its meddlesome activities, and is sapping the very foundations of local self-government. The fact that this paternalism often hides behind the cloak of benevolence renders it less abhorrent only to those who are willing to take a dangerous dose of poison provided it is sugar-coated. We who are behind the scenes do not lack concrete examples of this devitalizing influence at work in our Republic. They hit us in the face every time we turn around.

"Back to the Constitution" was the title of that address. He said if any political party would only adopt those words, that party would sweep the country. I appeal to the gentleman, realizing the great influence he has upon this Congress, that at a very early date he make another speech which will be entitled "Back to the Constitution."

What I have to say this afternoon, having in mind what the gentleman said at that time, will, I am sure, reinforce those remarks of his.

Mr. Speaker, at the cordial invitation of the majority leader that speeches be made this week, if they were to be made at all in the immediate future, I rose to my feet and asked for time, having noted a hesitancy at first, particularly on the minority side.

Mr. LUDLOW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. LUDLOW. I thank the gentleman for the compliment he pays me. I assume the gentleman does not mean to imply in what he has said that all of the responsibility for centralization rests on our side of the aisle, for the creation of governmental agencies and governmental commissions?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, in these latter days I shall have to say you have had full responsibility.

Mr. LUDLOW. Let me state to the gentleman that, as a matter of fact, when the last administration of his party expired there was a list of commissions, bureaus, and what nots of governmental agencies that were listed in the Library of Congress—and I can bring the book to him if he desires—that comprised 148 printed pages, which had grown up under the administration of the gentleman's party. Just the listing of them makes an entire volume in itself.

Mr. GIFFORD. I will say that that undoubtedly aroused interest, and it was one cause of the speech that the gentleman made at that time, but that was long before the Hoover administration. The gentleman made this speech in 1927.

Mr. LUDLOW. It may not synchronize exactly with that speech, but what I am telling the gentleman is true about the list of governmental establishments that were in existence during and prior to the Hoover administration. It is a matter of recognized history that the Hoover administration added to the number.

Mr. GIFFORD. I shall be glad to be interrupted a little later.

Mr. LUDLOW. I did not mean for one moment to absolve our side of the House from its responsibility along that line either, but I meant to convey the information that it has not been a one-party proposition. Both parties have been equally guilty. Both parties must answer for the conditions in governmental trends which I tried to describe in the speech to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. GIFFORD. I am willing to be interrupted a little later, but I should like to go on for a while. My conversation may perhaps be irritating to you, but it would also be irritating to me to have to adapt my conversation as you would like to have it.

Having noticed the hesitancy on the part of the minority in particular to take the floor early in this session, for the sake of the new Members of this House, at least, who, I felt, would reasonably and naturally expect a minority to be exceedingly active in this Congress, I have risen to speak.

After a period of 14 years of service in this House, and having been entertained so often in previous sessions by severe criticisms and ridicule heaped upon my Republican Presidents, I may in my remarks this afternoon have the temerity to follow somewhat the procedure of those other days, in the hope that it may possibly entertain those new Members and also remind them that if those precedents are to be followed, the minority on the Republican side will be perfectly justified in coming to life and expressing the opinions, criticisms, and fears which are in the minds and hearts of about 17,000,000 Republican voters.

We suffered a deluge of quantity votes in the last election, but we may still hold to the opinion that the minority votes may have been superior in quality. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. A little later.

The bait used by the Democrats in the last election certainly was superior to ours in collecting votes, but certainly my suggestion as to the quality versus quantity theory will find warm and sympathetic response in the hearts of those Members from those Southern States which registered some 25,000 to 35,000 votes only, although the quantity of people is actually about as great as in those States from which the rest of us come, which register 150,000. In such cases we may well imagine that quantity would not be as persuasive in elections if all the citizens who voted in those sections of our country were encouraged or permitted to participate. I come from a congressional district where most of the more recent residents voted the Democratic ticket. Those who have lived there the longest and who fully understand or should understand our history and our problems voted the Republican ticket. It is of great interest to me to look over my district from the quantity angle when I ask for advice on public opinions.

These are not the wails of a loser. No one could be in a happier frame of mind than I in this Congress. I come to you not pledged to vote for any crackpot legislation of any sort whatever. I do not even express any sympathy for such legislation, and I shall criticize it as I have criticized it so much here and during the recent campaign. It is, perhaps, strange that I should still be with you if quantity votes alone should account for it.

Still we have a responsibility as we watch you bring in the branches for your own funeral pyre in 1940. You are going to build it yourselves. Some people say about the minority that we should attempt to outdo you in liberality. But just be patient. About 1940 a conservative party will be something greatly to be desired in this Nation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. GIFFORD. Not at present. I do not want to adapt my conversation to yours now; I will later.

It is the bounden duty of the minority to be concrete, to criticize, and to point out the weaknesses and dangers of any proposed legislation. I read lately that it would be the duty of the minority to inform themselves and understand better all legislative proposals than the majority Members themselves. This should not be a difficult assignment. [Laughter.] To prove my assertion I now call attention to the minority arguments attending the tax bill passed in the last session of Congress. I shall point out the damage it has already done, and I shall comment on the Robinson-Patman bill and others which, obeying the dictates of your President, you hastily and by steam-roller tactics placed on the statute books. I refer you to the minority arguments on such legislation, in which we well advised you. No; it will not be too difficult.

We well understand the President's appeal in his recent message to Congress. No; I do not like to express fear, but I may state to the gentleman from Indiana that we are all of us, I am sure, fearful about something; and I think it is wise and safe to continue in that fear. To illustrate: Pat said, "In the war I was shot through the left chest and the bullet came out through my back."

Mike said, "How could you have been shot through your chest and the bullet have come out through your back without passing through your heart?"

"Oh", Pat said, "at the moment my heart was in my mouth." [Laughter.]

You carry your heart in your mouth. It is the safest way. Be frightened and perhaps we may avoid being injured.

Flushed with victory! I was interested to note the joyfulness of the entrance of the President of the United States into this Chamber. You must pardon the minority, after such a thorough defeat, for having a little feeling about the matter. And if I may use an acerbity—sometimes translated as a sourness, but call it what you wish—when the President came here with his first message, a message that was really addressed to the Supreme Court, not to us, although it was delivered in this room where applause and adulation would be forthcoming, I, on the minority, of course, had in mind what had happened heretofore, and perhaps had a little streak of meanness in my disposition, and I somehow want to share with you what kept going through my mind. And I really hope you will enjoy it. It, too, is an acerbity, but I could not help thinking—

Here comes the fall bride,
With a smile a mile wide,
As down the church aisle
She doth trot him.

Every line of her grin,
Every tilt of her chin,
Seems to say:
"I got him, I got him, I got him."

We listened to the message. What was the message? Why, "We won!" "The country has backed us in our proceedings." And, "I thank you for your cooperation." I ask you to read the message again, erase the word "cooperation", and insert in lieu thereof the word "obedience." Then you will have it. He meant further that considering the last mandate the country still expects complete obedience from you. I have but little doubt you still think that way.

Some of us, rather out of sympathy with certain of his methods of appeal, could not help but recall his savage appeals to class hatred. Did he not say on October 31 at Madison Square Garden, "Never before were these forces so unanimously against anyone as these forces are against me. I welcome their hatred."

Yes; that is what he said.

He electrified the country with that statement, and I claim he won millions of votes by another amazing statement which is still ringing in your ears and mine:

"I want it said of my last administration that these forces have met their match. I want it said of my second administration that these forces have met their master." How the masses love a master! It is exemplified in European countries.

He is not my master! Is he yours? And are you connected with any one of those forces? Those are forces assaulted and defined as forces of lust and power. Never was there such an exhibition by any President of the United States, nor by any individual who seems to have such lust of power as does our present President.

Ah, but he tells you, sugar-coatedly, it is for benevolent purposes. But he warns: "This power we have taken back to Washington in other hands would be dangerous."

He therein pays a tribute to himself, does he not?

I want to comment on the last message sent to the Congress. It deals with the reorganization of our entire Federal Government. For what purpose? The former Comptroller General stated yesterday as reported in headlines that it was a smoke screen to take away the last vestige of power that the Congress has over the purse strings of the country. "Smoke screen" well defines it.

About the only department answerable to us was the Comptroller General. That was the last and only control we had over those purse strings. Now the President wants it placed in the Treasury Department, and hereafter when an appropriation that we have made is spent contrary to law, there cannot be a decision on the matter except after a complaint, and then only through the judicial processes of the Attorney Generals' office. There will no longer be anyone to determine what our intent was or what the law really is. No longer could we prevent a favorite of the Government from breaking a contract, which may be to the Nation, if he can convince the powers that be that he could make no profit under his bid. This sort of favoritism is the thing we tried so hard to do away with 15 years ago, but now it seems that it is to be brought back.

The President said in his message that he was not asking for more power. He said, "I already have that power under the Constitution." Yes; he has the power under the Constitution to shoot a gun, but now he wants a cannon. That is, he wants greater instruments of power in order to carry such things out more fully and put this Nation more directly under his supervision.

He states, "Oh, yes; I will leave matters of policy in the semi- or quasi-judicial independent organizations. I shall leave questions of policy up to them, but I want their personnel and I want their administration under my control."

Gifford Pinchot made a statement—and I think it is a wise saying—that "the last election determined that we no longer want to be under the control of concentrated wealth." But in so doing the Nation has condoned a much worse and a more damaging thing in connection with the control of Government. It is known by the name of "Farleyism."

Does anyone doubt that Farley stands behind the President in the matter of appointments? And they have done what to the civil service? I cannot think of a proper word, so I will let you provide one for me. Make it an ugly word. The President wants to do away with the Civil Service Board and have but one individual. He wants to do all the appointing; and who is it that will tell him whom to appoint? He wants to revamp all of the organizations, and yet does not claim but 1-percent saving on the whole thing.

After all the inquiry they must have made, the committee which reported on that was obliged to say that he intends to carry on as permanent organizations practically all of these temporary things. He wants to convert them into the permanent establishments. The committee seems to take it for granted.

Mr. Speaker, I spent many hours, a day or two ago, over Budget messages. I went over them for the last 8 years, and I have some interesting facts in my notebook. You will notice many pages of manuscript here devoted to mean attacks on this side when you were in the minority. If properly baited I shall read some of them.

To revert briefly to the Budget reports for the last 8 years, I went from one to the other and made certain comparisons. Lo and behold, when I came down to the last one, and compared it with the first of 4 years ago, the picture set out was a most startling one to me. The recent Budget messages have been rather short and have been largely statements of fact, fairly truthful, I am sure.

In the last message it was stated that in 1938 the Budget will be balanced. But what did I find to be true? In 1938 the President and this administration will have brought about the formation of a $7,000,000,000 government, permanently established. If he plans to balance that Budget costing $7,000,000,000, he must raise $7,000,000,000 yearly. Can he raise it in any other way than by placing taxes upon our people? No. If the Budget is really to be balanced, it must be paid for in taxes. Where is he going to get this money? Why, he is expecting to get three and three-tenths billions of the $7,000,000,000 from income taxes, $993,000,000 more in 1938 than the Government will receive this fiscal year. He must either expect amazingly prosperous times, or he expects to take more away from the reserves of our citizens, as was done last year in the most recent tax bill. Dip deeper and deeper into the reserves that have been accumulated during all the years against rainy days and progress? Take it away from that railroad that is bound to pay every year a portion of its indebtedness, but at the same time is fined some 35 percent if it dares pay its indebtedness. It must distribute it to the stockholders, and by way of those stockholders he is going to get some of that extra $993,000,000.

Oh, he told the country during the last election, "We get most of our money from direct taxes—from the income-tax payer."

Do we not know that he gets only 8 cents out of every dollar from the income-tax payer and 7 cents only from the corporation, and the corporation takes it from us first? It does not count as really a direct tax.

Did he tell us that he got 6 cents out of every dollar from rum last year, with $720,000,000 of real new revenue for the Democratic administration? No; only that 8 cents and the 7 cents; all the rest came from indirect taxation. He wants to change that picture; he would like to convince the masses of the people that he will tax only the few rich, and that they will be relieved of the burden.

I was privileged to talk to W. P. A. workers who felt I was not quite sympathetic enough, and I said, "I am more sympathetic with you than you seem to understand. You probably misunderstand me. You pay twice. You work for it—perhaps not as hard as you might, but you work for it—and then you are taxed again to pay for it. You pay twice and I am really sorry." However, I could not make them see that. One could not make them understand that when they took a glass of beer or smoked a cigarette or bought some clothes or bought something to eat they were really paying for it. Real-estate and municipal taxes do not pay this debt.

Referring for a moment to 1940, I want to talk briefly about the economic forces against which you are trying to joust. They are inexorable economic forces.

This afternoon the Speaker eulogized the trip to South America, but we of the minority are not wholly fooled. That was not in its larger purpose a peace trip. It was not primarily to get a multilateral action of South American republics as against the unilateral situation existent before. No; we know your trade agreements were growing sour. If you want me to prove it, I will read from the New York Sun the exact results. The idea of good Yankee trading has been insulted by the trades we have been making. Trade was growing sour, and, while Europe was otherwise involved, it was a good time to go to South America and work within that framework of peace talk for some new trade agreements. We will tell Argentina she can now send more of her cattle here. Listen to that, you gentlemen from Texas! Tell Cuba we will enlarge her quota of sugar a little more. This was flattery to those so-called democratic countries; but was Batista, the real man of Cuba, there? When I read about those republics of South America, democracies, usually with a dictator backed by an army close behind, perhaps really running the country, I thought of overnight revolutions, and now they tie these democracies (?) up with an entirely new Monroe Doctrine, really in order that we may get more trade with them. That, as appears to us, is what the expedition was for.

Referring now to economic conditions, you are trying every day to raise prices. This is your great ambition. Talk of social security when you add 9 cents on every dollar which the consumer must pay, on the one hand, and at the same time lower our tariffs. Soon these economic forces will come together in one mighty impact. The largest army will conquer the world, as the old saying is, but low prices get the business.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. If these forces will come into conflict and cause another depression, how does the gentleman account for the closing of about 6,500 banks under the administration of Herbert Hoover?

Mr. GIFFORD. Would the gentleman like to have me answer that question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. That diverts me somewhat, but I am ready with my answer.

I was here under the Hoover administration. I was here when Austria began the trouble and when Germany followed and then England followed, and yet your President in 1932 asserted that he was for sound money and ridiculed Hoover for suggesting that we might have to go off the gold standard. But after his election, where did he go? Down to Warm Springs. Whom did he send for to consult about money policies? Look it up. When the country found who he was sending for and whose advice he was taking, that started something. No matter what may be said now, history will record what brought about the desperate state of affairs that followed. Lay it to Hoover temporarily, as you may, but we know where the real blame is going to be laid later on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I do not think the gentleman has answered the question. I wanted an answer as to the forces under the Hoover administration which ended in the cataclysmic closing of the 6,500 banks, as compared with the present or contemporary forces which the gentleman prophesies will result in the growth of the conservative group in 1940.

Mr. GIFFORD. That takes a rather long answer, but I shall adapt my conversation to your advantage, if you wish. Look up the record. When the R. F. C. loans were published as the result of our action here and the people read that their banks were in trouble, that was a large, contributing factor.

If you are interested in these economic forces, read a speech I put in the RECORD during the last Congress. I fought for 10 days on the floor to be allowed 20 minutes in which to make that speech, and objection was made on that side. That speech was on "nervous money." The President, before leaving for South America, called it "hot money." It is really properly termed "tramp money."

These economic forces have been recognized by him; and even Governor Eccles, who formerly said that this country could stand a debt of $40,000,000,000, seems now worried and demands a balanced Budget. He is frightened about our increased holdings of gold and hopes to "freeze" a billion dollars of it with more borrowed money, on which we pay interest.

We cannot see how that freezing process will lessen the danger greatly. We surely increase the credit reserves in the banks by this borrowed money. The danger point is nearly reached. That is why the Budget must be balanced very shortly. Credit and finance have worked so differently than he or any of the rest of us could prophesy. The more we owe, the more danger of inflation. These natural economic laws are inexorable. I thank God that the President—and he has my prayers as he has yours; I pray for him—has at last recognized this danger. I am glad to see him running in the other direction. I only hope he can run fast enough.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Does the gentleman agree that we did wrong in going off the gold standard?

Mr. GIFFORD. I believe we did wrong in devaluing to 59 cents. We could have devalued to 75 or 80 with safety. He recalled Moley from the stabilization conference in Europe, and probably said, "Now, over here we will do a little gambling on our own account." That was the end of Moley.

Mr. PIERCE. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. PIERCE. Then we went off gold too much? The gentleman does not complain because we did go off gold, but it was because we went off more than he thinks we should have gone?

Mr. GIFFORD. I should like to agree with Hoover and say perhaps we should have gone off a little. But the point is we went off too much.

Mr. PIERCE. All the world went off, did it not?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes. Where is Dr. Warren, with whom he sought to consult at Warm Springs? Why did not Senator GLASS accept the post as Secretary of the Treasury? Probably because he could not get a statement from your President that he would not go off of gold. Before he took the oath of office we knew that gold was being withdrawn from us. Our own citizens were hoarding it. Foreigners were taking their hot money, so called, withdrawing it overnight.

Mr. PIERCE. The gentleman admits it was necessary to go off gold?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, a little; but he tried to go too far, hoping to beat all of the other countries. Look at the trouble he caused in other countries. You had to vote extra money to pay our men abroad to live, with our dollar at 59 cents. We could get $20 for our own gold to buy securities. People of foreign countries got $35 for theirs and bought our best securities at this favorable margin. It is a humiliating story to tell it all.

I want to ask you to read that little short speech I made last June.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What is the purchasing power of the dollar today in the United States as compared with 1929?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, I do not know, but I know a lady the other day ordered 25 cents' worth of beefsteak, and she said, "If I am not at home, push it through the keyhole." [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman answer my question? What is the purchasing power of the dollar today as compared with 1929?

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not know.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is not the purchasing power greater? Then there must be more valuation in the dollar.

Mr. GIFFORD. I can tell the gentleman about my own purchasing power. I know that. Shall I tell the gentleman about that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The gentleman was just speaking about the valuation of the dollar, and he referred to European countries.

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, it is just as hard to get hold of a dollar today as it was before devaluation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But how about it in the United States?

Mr. GIFFORD. The President seems to have assured us that we could pay our bills at 59 cents on the dollar after devaluation. We have just as hard work to get a dollar now as we did before. That phase of it all amounted to nothing, and you know it.

If there are no further questions, Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand there is an impeachment proceeding coming up this afternoon?

Mr. RANKIN. It is just a resolution for investigation.

Mr. SNELL. Well, whatever it is.

Mr. RANKIN. I will not take over 10 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Well, if we are going to start, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. I think we should have a full understanding of this.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman does not object to my time?

Mr. SNELL. No; but I think we ought to have a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

Mr. GIFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I think it is a fair question, and I want the gentleman to have his time, but I did want to leave the Chamber. Is the gentleman going to attack my speech?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no, no.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman withhold that for a moment and let me make a suggestion?

Mr. SNELL. Well, if you are going to start any of these things, we are going to have a quorum here. I want our members of the Committee on the Judiciary present to hear the gentleman's statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-one Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

On motion of Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I am requested to announce that my colleague the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. CROSSER, is absent on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield for that purpose?

Mr. RANKIN. Not if it is to be taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a short resolution which will be the basis of those remarks.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman restate his request?

Mr. RANKIN. I asked permission to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution about which I shall talk.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request if I am going to be harassed with reservations to take up my time.

FEDERAL JUDGE JOHN J. GORE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a resolution for an investigation of Judge John J. Gore, Federal judge for the middle district of Tennessee, for the purpose of making an investigation looking to the impeachment of Judge Gore. One of the grounds on which I shall base my charges when the matter comes before the House is that Judge Gore violated the law, willfully violated the law, by issuing an injunction to paralyze the operations of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Congress passed the law 3 years ago providing for the creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority and for its operation. We have passed upon that subject since that time. Useless to say that our actions in that respect have been approved by the American people by 11,000,000 majority.

The Power Trust, in my opinion the most corrupt and powerful organization of wealth and influence ever known in America, has been trying for years to destroy the Tennessee Valley Authority. They want to destroy the "yardstick" which has been established for the measurement of light and power rates, and to get control of the electric energy generated on the Tennessee River.

They went before a Federal judge in Alabama and tried to destroy the Tennessee Valley Authority about 2 years ago through the Ashwander case. That case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court, in terms which it seems to me no one could misunderstand, held that Congress had a right to do exactly what it was doing through the Tennessee Valley Authority. In the face of that decision this judge in this case issued an injunction to paralyze the operation of the Tennessee Valley Authority. In doing so, as I said, he abused his official prerogatives by arrogating to himself the right to set aside an act of Congress and to repudiate a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Some will say, "Why not appeal?" What good does it do to appeal when we have already appealed and the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained us. It would merely take about 2 years more time. This judge might have as little regard for the decision of the Supreme Court the next time and might proceed to enjoin again.

This is not an attack on the judiciary. I, for one, am not in favor of taking away from the Supreme Court of the United States the right to pass upon the constitutionality of acts of Congress.

Certain inferior Federal judges in this country, however, are bringing the judiciary into ill repute. This is one of them. In my humble opinion, such decisions as this will do more to promote communism in this country than all the soap-box orators in America.

How do you suppose the people of Memphis, Tenn.—Nashville, Knoxville, Chattanooga, and other towns and communities in Tennessee—feel, people who are being robbed and plundered by overcharges in light and power rates every month that rolls around? How do you suppose the people of Birmingham, Tuscaloosa, Jasper, and other towns in Alabama; Aberdeen, Columbus, Starkwell, Jackson, and other towns throughout Mississippi and other communities throughout these States feel tonight when they realize that this injunction, in violation of the law, in violation of a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, has been issued to hold them while this influence continues to rob them of hundreds of thousands of dollars monthly through overcharges for electric light and power?

Mr. Speaker, I would prefer the charges now, but there has come to me information touching other charges that involve moral turpitude, such as unconscionable attorneys' fees paid under questionable conditions, misconduct in the handling of bankruptcy matters, misconduct in the handling of receiverships, and the purchase of land by officials out of the funds of these receiverships and these bankruptcy proceedings. These questions, as I say, involve moral turpitude. If these charges be true, they demand that the Congress of the United States investigate them; so, Mr. Speaker, I have chosen this course, which, I understand, is the usual procedure.

I therefore offer and send to the Clerk's desk a resolution, and I ask its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary is authorized and directed, as a whole or by subcommittee, to inquire into and investigate the official conduct of John J. Gore, United States district judge for the middle district of Tennessee, to determine whether in the opinion of said committee he has been guilty of any high crime or misdemeanor which, in the contemplation of the Constitution, requires the interposition of the constitutional powers of the House. Said committee shall report its findings to the House, together with such resolution of impeachment or other recommendation as it deems proper.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of this resolution the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearing, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. I have discussed this matter with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we might as well understand in the beginning that if this resolution passes we are embarking upon one of the most serious undertakings of the House of Representatives. That is the impeachment of a Federal judge. An attack upon a just court is a direct attack upon the liberties of the people, and matters of this kind must be apprcached after mature thought and unprejudiced consideration.

The precedents are clear; the rules are clear. If a Federal judge has so conducted himself as to warrant an investigation of this kind, the rules provide that any Member of the House willing to assume the responsibility of impeachment may rise upon the floor of the House and upon his individual responsibility as a Member of Congress publicly impeach the judge. When that is done, then the procedure which the gentleman here seeks is followed.

I know nothing about this case and never heard of it until a minute ago, but I have been through several impeachment cases in this House. I thought the rule was pretty well established in the Seventy-fourth Congress that when a Member of the House had sufficient evidence or had sufficient proof calling for the intervention of the constitutional power of impeachment of a Federal judge, that Member should have the courage, or at least the proof, to stand up before the Congress and impeach the judge.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I decline for the moment to yield to the gentleman.

In other words, if this resolution is passed we have accomplished indirectly all we could accomplish directly by a resolution of impeachment. By this procedure no one assumes any responsibility. A cloud of suspicion is cast over a presiding judge of our courts. His whole official life is to be investigated by a committee of Congress, and this without a scintilla of proof that he is an unfit judge. The only charge made is that he rendered a decision in a given case which, in the opinion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], is improper. If this is an improper decision, an appeal can and should be taken to the higher court, and we should all be pleased to accept the ruling of the highest court as the law of the land.

The gentleman from Mississippi, in explaining his position, indicates that he does not feel there should be an appeal taken in this matter. Whether the decision is wrong should be determined by the courts of the land in a constitutional way. The gentleman should not make a political issue out of a matter of this kind.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to make a political speech and fill the RECORD full of misrepresentations, I am going to demand the regular order.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], under reservation of objection, seems to have made a political speech. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I hope he will manifest the courage, as he calls it, to investigate this case thoroughly from every angle.

This injunction seems to be a part of a well-laid plan to destroy the T. V. A. "yardstick", in order that the private power interests of this country may continue to rob the ultimate consumers of electric light and power of more than a billion dollars a year.

If they can destroy the T. V. A. or paralyze its operations, then their next move will be against Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee, Bonneville, Peck, and other great power projects in the West.

This is a battle between the administration, on one hand, backed up by the expressed confidence of the people, and corrupt power interests on the other, to see who will own and control our great wealth of hydroelectric power in the years to come.

Whoever controls the water power in this country in the future will control the Nation. This administration has made a masterful effort to retain it for the American people and to give them the benefit of it for all time to come.

The Supreme Court of the United States has upheld what Congress has done in that respect. Yet here we have a local Federal judge, answerable to nobody on earth except the Congress of the United States, setting aside the acts of Congress and the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in order to carry out the will of these utilities, and to help them rob and plunder the millions of consumers of electric light and power now and for all time to come; shut the door of hope in the face of the farmers of this Nation and prevent them from enjoying the use of any electricity at all.

This is the most flagrant abuse of judicial power that has ever come to my notice since I have been in public life. I hope the Committee on the Judiciary reports back recommendations of impeachment on this proposition, regardless of what their investigation may show concerning the alleged misconduct touching other matters.

This decision also sounds a warning to this Congress that something must be done to curb a certain element of the Federal judiciary and put a stop to their persistent attempts to ignore the Congress and the Supreme Court and govern this country by injunctions.

Mr. MICHENER. Taking advantage of the privilege extended, I want to call the attention of the House to the seriousness of this matter of impeaching our Federal judges, the effect of which is, in many cases, in the minds of many people, to impeach our Federal courts. As I have just stated, I have no knowledge about what is claimed in this case. Neither has the House. All we do know is contained in the short statement made by the gentleman from Mississippi that this Federal judge has made a decision which does not comport with the judgment of the gentleman from Mississippi as to the type of decision a Federal judge should make when passing upon matters pertaining to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

I have never read that decision. After reading the decision, I may be in accord with the gentleman from Mississippi as to the merits of the decision. If this judge made a wrong decision as to the law, and did it conscientiously and without color of fraud, then he certainly is not impeachable on that ground. If it were otherwise, there would be many impeachments, especially in cases where the court is divided.

Let us assume that the House proceeded to impeach this judge for making an improper decision as to just what the law is, and then the higher court on appeal sustained the judgment of the judge. We should not attempt to discuss the results on this occasion, however. If the gentleman from Mississippi honestly believes that this judge should be impeached, and has sufficient evidence to present to the House warranting such action, it would seem that he should follow the rules, assume the responsibility, and then proffer his proof to the Committee on the Judiciary, to which impeachment matters are referred.

This resolution simply directs the Judiciary Committee to go on a fishing expedition to ascertain whether or not it can find some grounds on which to impeach this judge. Our liberties, as well as our property, are unsafe if our judicial officers are to be threatened with impeachment on the slightest provocation unless their decisions are in harmony with the economic and political views of all of our citizens. This is impossible, and the part of wisdom, it would seem, suggests that this resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration before any action is taken. If the gentleman from Mississippi has proof to submit, he will find the committee an unprejudiced, conscientious forum, ready to do its full duty at all times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard, and the resolution is referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF SELECT COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 60.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 60

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a select committee of seven Members of the House to be known as the Select Committee on Government Organization, for the purpose of considering and reporting upon the subject matter contained in the message of the President of the United States of January 12, 1937. All bills and resolutions introduced in the House proposing legislation concerning reorganization, coordination, consolidation, or abolition of, or reduction of personnel in, organizations or units in the executive branch of the Government shall be referred by the Speaker to the said Select Committee on Government Organization. The said Select Committee on Government Organization is hereby authorized to report to the House at any time by bill or otherwise with recommendations upon any matters covered by this resolution; and any bill or resolution so reported shall be placed upon the calendar and have a privileged status.

That said committee or any subcommittee thereof is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or adjourned; to hold such hearings; to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives or the chairman of said committee, and shall be served by any person designated by them or either of them. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any questions pertinent to the matter herein authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by sections 102, 103, and 104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., title 2, secs. 192, 193, and 194).

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, this resolution (H. Res. 60), which has been reported by the Rules Committee is one step toward carrying out the recommendations made in the message of the President which was read to us on last Tuesday. The message and the report of the President's committee makes certain recommendations as to the reorganization of the various Government departments.

It was found there was no one committee in the House that could handle all the matters which may be involved in connection with a reorganization of the various branches, bureaus, and departments of the Government. The jurisdiction of our standing committees, some 46 in number, is set forth very specifically in the rules of the House, and a bill attempting a reorganization of the general governmental set-up could not be referred to any one committee. It was therefore determined that in order to handle such recommendations a committee specifically authorized to deal with such recommendations be set up.

It was first suggested that another standing committee of the House be created in addition to the 46 existing committees. This committee, of course, would for all time infringe upon the jurisdiction of the present committees, such as the Civil Service Committee, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and others. Those committees, naturally, do not want to be shorn of all their power for all time, and after consideration, it was agreed upon—newspaper stories to the contrary notwithstanding—by the Speaker of the House and the leader of the House that a special, temporary committee be set up for this purpose.

This resolution therefore provides for a select committee, sometimes called a "special" committee, of seven members to be appointed by the Speaker and to serve during this Congress, to which committee all bills relating to a reorganization of the Government would be referred.

Of course, such a committee does, during this Congress, infringe upon the jurisdiction of other committees of the House. The chairmen of those committees have been most magnanimous and have not protested, at least not very strongly, against this intrusion of their prerogatives.

The procedure that this resolution takes is similar to the so-called Economy Committee back in 1933, as I recall, where a special committee was set up to handle similar proposals as to economy in government. That committee reported legislation which was acted on in the House.

Accompanying this resolution, which is House Resolution 60, is House Joint Resolution 81, which we propose to call up after this resolution is disposed of, which provides for a joint committee of seven Members of the House and seven Members of the Senate, and we understand the seven Members on the part of the House on this joint committee will be the same seven Members who are appointed on the special committee. This joint committee of the House and Senate will investigate the subject of Government reorganization, and the committee will be a means of cooperation between the two bodies so that the difficulties encountered by separate action and in conference, and so forth, will be avoided as far as possible.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman stated there is no standing committee of this House at the present time that would have jurisdiction of all these matters.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I so understand.

Mr. SNELL. It would seem to me that the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which covers all the departments, would have or could have jurisdiction of a matter of this kind, since this is primarily a matter of expenditure, and that it would be a very appropriate committee to refer this matter to.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not so understand. This matter, of course, is not solely directed toward expenditures. I understand, for instance, the Civil Service Committee would be involved in matters which are not within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that a great many of these matters have already been studied more or less by that committee? I am not saying anything against the entire proceedings.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I think so. I think that committee has had a number of these matters under consideration by separate bills.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I thought, and considering the amount of work they have done along this line it seemed to me it would be a pretty good committee to which to refer this matter.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not believe that could be done entirely from a jurisdictional standpoint. We are limited under our rules with respect to the exact jurisdiction of a committee.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I noted with a great deal of interest that the gentleman said this committee was being set up under the same procedure that created the Special Economy Committee, may we look forward to the same results from this committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Well, of course, the gentleman is a young man and hope should spring more eternally within him than in most of us old fellows. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HARLAN. Referring to the question of the gentleman from New York with reference to the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments, is it not true that the chairman of that committee, who is familiar with everything that that committee has done and with this resolution also, has appeared before the Rules Committee and expressed his approval of this resolution and his willingness that this special committee be set up.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is correct, or at least, he did not object and I think he somewhat agreed with the fact that his committee was not completely authorized to handle the entire work.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. In keeping with what the gentleman from New York has just stated, we have had three or four bills introduced in the present Congress providing for reorganization of Government agencies, and only one of them has gone to the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments. One went to the Committee on Patents and I do not know where the other two or three were referred, but the only one that went to the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU] consolidating the Army and Navy and creating a Department of National Defense. This is the only bill that has come to us.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for me to make a statement right here?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. In 1932 or 1933, when President Hoover made specific recommendations with respect to a reorganization, if I am not incorrect in the matter, it was referred by the Speaker to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments; and if that resolution, which was nearly as broad as the pending one, was referred in that way without any objection, why should not this one go there also?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, we do things a little differently now than under the Hoover administration.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I wanted the gentleman to say. You are doing things differently, and the gentleman has admitted my point. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. MAY. As I understand this resolution, it authorizes hearings by the committee that will be appointed, and from such hearings they will get adequate information which will be available to both Houses of Congress, and the resolution leaves it entirely in the hands of Congress instead of some outside committee or agency.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Surely; it is entirely a congressional committee.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to supplement the suggestion of the majority leader that the various messages of President Hoover were referred to the Committee on Expenditures. I want to say that it would be hardly fair if the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures were not included in this committee. I think he ought to be, and he has a right to expect to be included. But that is not sufficient, in my mind, to cut out the rest of the committee, who, when they were assigned to this committee, supposed it would be an important committee. Does not the gentleman think there might be a little unfairness in that?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I cannot pass upon that.

Mr. GIFFORD. This is simply a different way of doing business.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAVERICK. Is not this committee to be more or less in the nature of a standing committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It is a special committee.

Mr. MAVERICK. It is a legislative committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. MAVERICK. Should it not be constituted through the committee on committees other than through the Speaker?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, no; that would be accomplishing what we do not want to do, to interfere with the other standing committees in a permanent way. This is the way it has been handled heretofore, and when its work is done, which we hope will be in 2 or 3 months, or at least at the end of this Congress, the committee expires automatically.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I would like to state that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures last year appointed a committee to handle and make a study of certain matters, and no doubt that committee collected valuable information. The chairman, Mr. COCHRAN, the gentleman from Missouri, tried to get his committee to work in conjunction with that appointed by the Senate, but was unable to do so. I think if we could get the two committees together you would get a lot of information that would be valuable.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, all committees expire at the end of each Congress. That is a fact that is sometimes overlooked. Whether they are standing committees or special committees, they are defunct when final adjournment is called. However, it is not beyond possibility, if this job were not completed during this Congress, that it might be proposed and adopted to create a standing committee to handle the matter. No harm is done in the meantime, because the men who are members of this committee, if they so desired and the House wanted them to serve, could be elected to the standing committee to continue the work during another Congress.

Mr. EATON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. EATON. I would like to ask the gentleman why would it not be appropriate to refer this whole thing to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Documents?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am not familiar with the duties of that committee, except that I recall I helped to change its name in the last Congress.

Mr. EATON. That was a kindness.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I think the name was more unkind that the present one.

Mr. EATON. The reason I asked that is because I would like to know whether this proposed committee will handle the salaries of employees, the same as the Economy Committee did, in which they reduced the salaries of all those under $1,000 that they possibly could, and, where possible, raised the salaries of the others. Is that the intention in this case?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have no knowledge of what the intentions of this committee may be after it is set up and goes to work. My views are only personal. Of course, we have always heard about putting more efficiency into Government. Very few people entertain the hope that Government, whether it is local, State, or Federal, will ever be as efficient as private business. It seems hopeless to get what we know as real efficiency in Government. All we can do is improve it from time to time. If this is one step in realizing efficiency, that will help the Government. Personally I hope that some economy will grow out of it. [Applause.]

I think it is an alarming thing, something that has attracted the attention of our taxpayers and the people of this country, that the cost of government has practically doubled, and in spite of the campaign speeches made and criticism by big business that the increase was due to "wasting money on relief", the facts are that the cost of government has increased by more than all the cost of relief—by at least a billion dollars. I would like to see at least that billion dollars taken out of the cost of government, rather than to take a billion dollars away from the people of the country who really need relief. [Applause.]

So the additional cost cannot all be charged to relief. There is at least a billion dollars, and perhaps more, that has been foisted on the cost of government by so-called temporary agencies and bureaus. If one of you ever saw a "temporary" agency, I never did. We have been using the nomenclature, we have been calling them "temporary", but just deceiving ourselves, because once one of them gets its elongated nose under the Government tent it sees to it that it is forever folded into the arms of Mother Government. We see that happening every day now. The urge is to perpetuate themselves, to perpetuate their big organizations, with the friends and relatives, to the fourth degree, on the pay roll; but beyond that, the greater urge is to prevent that inevitable day of reckoning when they must finally account for their stewardship. [Applause.]

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I am under the impression that in recent years no special committee that has been appointed has been given the power of bringing legislation to the floor. With the exception of the Economy Committee, I have no recollection of any other committee having the power to report and bring legislation to the floor.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not recall any, other than the Economy Committee.

Mr. ANDREWS. It is my understanding that the Brookings Institution, at the instigation of the committee which expired last Congress, had made a very detailed study of the Government, and is about to submit recommendations to Congress. Would that report go to this committee and be acted upon by this committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, the gentleman refers to reports to the House. I imagine the intent of the resolution is that all matters pertaining to this, which come to the House, will be referred to this special committee.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. How much will the services of the Civil Service Committee be used in this reorganization? I am a member of that committee and I have great respect and admiration for the chairman of that committee, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]. He has fought hard for the merit system. I feel he and his committee would be a tremendously valuable member in the reorganization.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. And so do I. I imagine this special committee will be glad to have the assistance, at hearings or otherwise, of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service and other members of the committee, or anyone else who desires to contribute anything to the matter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, later on I shall offer some perfecting amendments to this resolution to cure defects which were discovered after the resolution was printed last evening.

We hope the proposal will work out something toward efficiency and economy. We are not going to satisfy everybody in this attempt at reorganization of the Government. It is not going to be done in a day or a week; but if, during this Congress, we make some progress, we shall at least feel somewhat content that we have gone some distance and satisfied to some extent the justified complaints of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is recognized this resolution calls for legislation to be considered in an entirely different way than usual. It is entirely irregular and will interfere with the jurisdiction of regular committees. The Republican members of the Rules Committee, however, are not going to object to the creation of a special committee. We realize in the last campaign the Democrats talked so much about efficiency and economy they probably feel they have got to do something about it. One cannot but be a little skeptical whether anything will come of it, but we want to give the administration a fair chance to see just what they will accomplish.

When the original proposal was made it called for the appointment of a standing committee of the House. This certainly would have called forth our vigorous opposition, because it brings one's mind back to the days when a political revolution was fought over this very issue. I refer to the occasion when a distinguished western Senator, in the days of Uncle Joe Cannon, made a great reputation here because he was opposed to the Speaker's appointing a standing committee of the House. A great parliamentary battle was fought over that, which was termed "Cannonism." Happily, the proposal to restore this old power of the Speaker has been abandoned, and we feel we can go along in the appointment of this committee. The Democratic Party will now have a full chance to bring about economy and efficiency if they are really serious about it. We shall, of course, reserve our full rights to oppose any legislation they may bring in. By permitting the appointment of a committee we do not commit ourselves to the legislation which may follow.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. EATON. Can the gentleman give us any idea as to the amount of money that will be appropriated in order to bring about this economy?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey that all the maneuverings I have seen around here have generally added to the cost of government. The gentleman from New York quite frankly admits these temporary agencies of government have proven extremely expensive. They have not only loaded the departments with excess personnel but the personnel has received a higher wage than that received by the Government employees who perform similar work under civil service.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think the primary object back of these movements is to make permanent these temporary activities?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think that has considerable to do with it; it is desired to bring these temporary organizations into the permanent set-up of the Government; but I think there is a little more to it than that. I think also there is some political bunkum in the proposal. It is desired to let the country think we are actually trying to economize here. I predict, however, that when this Congress passes out of existence we shall find there has been little accomplished in the direction of economy. I asked the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations how much we saved in the last economy bill, and he frankly admitted that it was hardly anything.

This is all I care to say about the subject this afternoon. We are going to support the appointment of the special committee because we want to give the Democrats a chance to see what they will do in reducing the cost of the administration of government.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Would this committee point out the way by which the campaign promise of 1932 to reduce Government expenditures by 25 percent could be accomplished?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I am afraid that is asking the impossible.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. If we were to vote down the resolution now pending it would not affect the introduction of this legislation, as I understand it, but would only result in such legislation being referred to one of the standing committees of the House.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is correct. If the pending resolution should by any chance be voted down it would be possible, of course, to let the legislation pass through the regular channels of the House.

Mr. BOILEAU. So if we vote against this resolution it is not a vote against the bill for reorganization?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would not consider it so. I would consider it an indication that those who voted that way preferred to have the subject handled in the regular way.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. COX. But that is not the most feasible and best way to handle the proposition, is it?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit me, I may say you probably will not have any economy unless all these things are brought up in one bill with the great power of the President of the United States placed squarely back of it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I must impose myself upon the House again this afternoon. I happen to be the ranking man on the Republican side on the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. This committee was formed in 1927, and at that time it was said it would be one of the most important committees of the Congress. I stepped aside for another, a younger Member from Massachusetts, and allowed him to go on the Committee on Appropriations because I was in line to be chairman of this supposedly extremely important committee.

The work of this committee was to be as follows:

The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several departments, independent establishments, and commissions of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payment of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices.

As the chairman of the Rules Committee says:

We are now doing business in another way.

He wants seven new members appointed at the moment who will be docile, who will be conferred with as to whether they will be favorable to the President's desire for more power, as I suggested to you earlier this afternoon. The message of the President with reference to consolidation is full of demands for more and more power.

I do not wonder that the chairman of my committee, on the Democratic side, stated before the Rules Committee that he was willing that this be done. Unquestionably he will be appointed to this new committee. I greatly respect him, and I think he has been a real good fellow and gone along with your wishes. He has not allowed any of the expenditures on your part for the past 4 years to be investigated. Time and again we on this side have demanded that Resettlement agencies and other "give-away" agencies of the Government be brought before our committee, but the majority has not seen fit to permit this committee to examine into any of those expenditures. About all we have had to consider were bills raising or lowering our own salaries. The nasty things have been handed to this committee, but the chairman has done a wonderful work in suppressing them and not embarrassing the Members.

We have a resolution offered here today providing for a committee to take the place of a present permanent committee of the House: Listen to this:

All bills and resolutions introduced in the House proposing legislation concerning reorganization, coordination, consolidation, or abolition of, or reduction of personnel in, organizations or units in the executive branch of the Government—

Shall be referred to this select committee, the members of which will be carefully selected to carry out the wishes indicated in the message we listened to a day or two ago. You on that side know it, too.

Why, even the Supreme Court of the United States is an instance. Secretary Wallace said during the last campaign:

It is most important to elect a President who will select the right members of the Supreme Court.

And it was stated in some newspaper yesterday:

The way of the future will be for the President to send for someone proposed for appointment as a Justice and say, "Jake, how will you vote on certain legislation if we make you a member of the Supreme Court?"

Perhaps you read that.

Mr. BURDICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman will be kind to me.

Mr. BURDICK. I sympathize with the position the gentleman finds himself in.

Mr. GIFFORD. Do not make it personal.

Mr. BURDICK. No. I want to know if the gentleman does not realize the position he is in is very much the same position I am in after being run over by the minority committee on committees.

Mr. GIFFORD. In answer to the gentleman, may I say, as I said this morning, "I am perfectly happy." I do not think he is. [Laughter.] I am perfectly satisfied when I remember my friend, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, who was assigned to the Appropriations Committee, when I, as his senior, might have insisted on being put on that committee. But I took the bait. This was to have been one of the most important committees set up by both sides of the House.

Today I see it wholly emasculated, because for the moment it is necessary to carry out the President's wishes as outlined in his recent message. It is necessary at this particular moment to have a favorable committee, or at least a committee that is sympathetic with that message. As the chairman of the Rules Committee put it, it is the new way of this present Democratic majority. They must be sympathetic.

Mr. Speaker, I thought it therefore my duty to take the floor again and explain that this resolution emasculates the duties of an existing committee in order to assure the carrying out of the President's lust for more power and to provide one composed of faithful and obedient personnel. However, I am still a member of the Committee of the Whole. I can make my work just as interesting as I please, even though I will now be on a committee shorn of all importance. Most of us want to be assigned to a major committee. We think we have more standing by being a member of a major committee. I have warned the Members before that the power of this committee to investigate expenditures was really worthless. We shall remain on the Committee of the Whole and can take part in all legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I trust I have made it plain what the majority is doing and why they are doing it. No one can or will attempt to deny it. "It is the new way we now have." In order to serve we must be sympathetic and obedient to what the President tells us he wants. [Applause.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I was chairman of the Rules Committee when the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments was first set up, and I know very well what the intention of the House was at that time. I have engaged in a considerable study of the matter, and what the gentleman from Massachusetts has just stated here is absolutely true.

When we set up that committee we insisted on a strong personnel, and I can say without fear of successful contradiction that the intent of the House at the time we set up that committee was to take charge of exactly such propositions as is before the House at the present time.

If we set up a new committee to take charge of this legislation, there will be practically nothing left for the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments during the present session. This committee has been set up. It has committee rooms, clerks, and all of the necessary paraphernalia to consider this legislation, and without additional costs.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The committee has about 16 bills referred to it now, and only 1 bill on reorganization.

Mr. SNELL. Regardless of the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri, chairman of that committee, I maintain the proper place for this legislation is that committee, because he knows as well as I do that is what the committee was established for.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman tell me why bills on reorganization were referred to other committees like they have been in this session? Only one of four bills introduced came to the Committee on Expenditures.

Mr. SNELL. A bill was sent up here by President Hoover, and referred to your committee by a Democratic Speaker.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows that the committee held hearings on the bill?

Mr. SNELL. And threw them all out the window without any very serious consideration.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows that Mr. Hoover was more interested in one proposition than any other, and that was to take away from the engineers of the Army flood control and rivers and harbor work, and the House would not stand for it. Mr. Hoover wanted to turn that work over to civilian engineers, and the committee said "No" then, and will say "No" again to any such recommendation.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know what Mr. Hoover wanted, but I know what you did, and you never gave his recommendations any consideration whatever.

Mr. COCHRAN. That was what Mr. Hoover suggested, and the committee as well as the House refused to stand for it.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, you never gave the House any opportunity to act. Just a word further. I have tried to make my position clear as to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I still think I am right. I appreciate the fact, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has said, that the majority desires to proceed in a new way, so far as making this study is concerned. I believe there is no one on this side who has any objection to making this study, but we also believe it is not necessary to set up a new committee to do the work. It is a very important proposition. The only thing I was somewhat discouraged about was the reported statement of the President that he did not expect this would save very much money. I think if this work is properly, carefully, and consistently done it can be handled so as to save money for the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I suggest that if we included in this reorganization the consolidation of the War Department and the Navy Department, we could save a lot of money.

Mr. SNELL. I do not know what is intended.

Mr. BOILEAU. That is not included in the recommendations, I may state to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand it, when this question is before them, they can consider the entire question of consolidation and reorganization, and the gentleman or any other gentleman has a right to introduce a resolution and have it referred to this select committee.

Mr. BOILEAU. I may state to the gentleman that the bill which the gentleman from Missouri has referred to is a bill which I introduced on that subject and is now before his committee.

Mr. SNELL. I think it was proper to send it there, because at that time there was no special committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York will permit, I may say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the committee has held hearings on two occasions with respect to the very proposition he has embodied in the bill which he has introduced in this Congress, a bill to consolidate the Army and Navy, and if the gentleman wants copies of the hearings all he has to do is to come to the committee and he can get them. The House voted on this proposition on one occasion and it was defeated. It was included in the first economy bill. I was a member of the first economy committee.

Mr. SNELL. In concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, about all I want to say further is that I am firm in my conviction that this work could be well and properly done by the existing committees of the House and that it is not necessary to go to additional expense to set up a new committe or a new organization to do it. We are anxious to have this work well and properly done and we shall not oppose that. All we do is simply to suggest that we think it would be better if you used the organization at your command at the present time rather than set up a new one with additional expense to the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I take this time in order to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. I should like to ask what position the gentleman takes as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments with reference to this invasion of the authority of his committee?

Mr. COCHRAN. The position I take is to go along with the Democratic leaders of the House of Representatives and the President, as I have always done.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does not the gentleman know that the chairman of every committee has always been very zealous in his attempt to see that his committee is given proper recognition with respect to everything that may come within its jurisdiction? Why does not the gentleman stand on his hind legs, as it were, and demand that his committee be given the work that belongs to it under the jurisdiction originally conferred upon it?

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio and to the Members of the House that on four different occasions a subcommittee of my committee went before the Committee on Rules and asked for additional jurisdiction and additional power. The Rules Committee at no time has ever given us any additional power or jurisdiction. I repeat what I said before to the gentleman that there have been four bills on reorganization introduced in this House at this session of the Congress and only one of them has been referred to the Committee on Expenditures. In other words, the rules of the House today provide that such bills as pertain to certain subjects shall go to committees other than the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments even when they provide for the setting up or destroying of existing agencies. The Committee on Expenditures has no monopoly on such legislation under existing rules.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sorry my good friend from St. Louis, who has always been such a valiant fighter, has now put up the white flag, indicative of the fact he is supinely surrendering the jurisdiction of his committee.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that the gentleman from Missouri wants to see something accomplished and he knows this is the best way to accomplish it. He is not surrendering the jurisdiction of his committee any more than a dozen committees of the House are surrendering their jurisdiction.

The people of the country are expecting us to do something along this line, and I for one desire to render a real public service in improving administration as well as simplifying procedure, consolidating some offices and abolishing others, and from years of experience I know if this is to be done the only way to do it is through a special committee which above all can report bills and have the same right to call up the legislation as the Committees on Ways and Means and Appropriations have. That is why I favor the resolutions. If we are going to depend upon a half dozen committees of the House which will have jurisdiction unless this legislation is passed then you can just as well drop the matter entirely because history will repeat and we will accomplish nothing.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, in considering this resolution I think it is not so much a question of conflict of jurisdiction between standing committees as a desire on the part of the Members of the House to obtain action on reorganization of Government agencies for the purpose of efficiency and economy.

I am pleased to see that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is not so jealous of the powers of his committee that he is unwilling to turn this comprehensive matter over to a special committee. It is true that our friends of the opposition would like to stir up a little jealousy in the heart of our friend from Missouri, but the gentleman from Missouri knows what a difficult task this is, and he is willing that a special committee of the House shall at this time try to bring about some very beneficial results by making a special study of this matter.

There has been considerable said about the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. This committee was organized in 1927, when Mr. Coolidge, one of the great heralded economy Presidents in our history, was President.

So far there has been no comprehensive plan of reorganization. There have been various bills, but not in any great detail or widespread in their provisions.

Now we have before us a plan, a comprehensive plan.

When the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] and his party were in power, if the leaders had come forward with a comprehensive plan, they had jurisdiction and they might have exercised it.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I was not on that committee at that time.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon. I thought that he was. But no doubt Republicans had charge of that committee, but no comprehensive plan was brought forward by them to deal with this question in regard to economy and efficiency.

None of the bills presented sought to reduce power, but they always sought to extend the power. The first thing in the reorganization is to have better efficiency and after that the curtailment of personnel.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is not one of the strongest arguments against dividing the President's message among standing committees that under this special committee it can be considered as a whole by one committee?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman is right. Another reason for having a special committee is that the Speaker no doubt will select members from other major committees to serve, and if he selected a member from a standing committee there could be only one major assignment. That man, if he accepted the appointment on the special committee, would have to resign from the standing committee. No doubt the Speaker will want to select members from the major committees. Now, after 2 years, if there has been valuable accomplishment by this committee, it will be time for the House to decide whether it should be a permanent committee. I think a special committee at this time is the better one. I am glad that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has no feeling about this question of jurisdiction. There is not a single standing committee of the House that could take up this comprehensive plan, because it will deal with jurisdictional questions on perhaps 10 or a dozen of the leading committees of the House. It will be done in conjunction with the Senate and the executive department. I think this is a proper way to bring it in. Then at a later date we can decide upon the permanency of the committee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I may not be in harmony with making a standing committee of the House, but I want to say that the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments is about as well qualified as any man in the House to handle that situation.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I will have no argument with the gentleman about that. We all admit his qualifications.

Mr. RICH. He ought to be placed on this committee, because I believe he is better qualified than any man in the House.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman can talk to the Speaker about that. That power rests with him.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Personally no member of any major committee will suffer with respect to seniority, but the House as a whole will have the benefit of their services and will expedite the matter?

Mr. GREENWOOD. We will get a select committee composed of those whom the Speaker thinks are best qualified to handle the job. Without any loss in standing on any major committee, a Member can serve on this committee.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman know of anything that has developed which would indicate how the Speaker would divide the appointments to this committee?

Mr. GREENWOOD. None whatever. Under the resolution that power rests in the Speaker. We are not attempting to assume what the Speaker would do.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of New York: On page 1, lines 10 and 11, strike out "executive branch of the"; on page 1, line 8, after the word "legislation", insert "concerning such subject matter or."

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to have the gentleman tell us in just a few words what these amendments do to this resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The first amendment strikes out the words "executive branch of the Government." On reconsideration, it was thought that the language originally was too limited, because some of the commissions, and so forth, may not be strictly within the executive branch of the Government.

The gentleman may remember the Humphreys case, a member of the Federal Trade Commission, in which the Supreme Court held that the Federal Trade Commission was a Commission connected with the legislative branch of the Government and was not strictly in the executive branch of the Government.

Then, of course, if it may be desired to make some changes in reference to the Comptroller General's office, that office would not be strictly within the executive branch of the Government. So, to enable this committee to deal with all these multifarious commissions, agencies, and bureaus, we are striking out the limitation to the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. SNELL. If I had the votes, I would try to beat you on that, because I do not want to try to destroy the General Accounting Office, if that is one of the objects.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is not the specific purpose. The amendment is aimed at these other commissions.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me that this is largely what we consider to be the executive branch of the Government, where it is intended to make these changes. I should think that that would properly designate it. It will be impossible to reach the legislative branch or the judicial branch.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The present language possibly does not reach some of these commissions. The intent is to reach everything outside of the strictly legislative and judicial branches of the Government.

Mr. SNELL. We do not have any objection to that.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. This only refers to bills that should be referred by the Speaker to this select committee. It that not right?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is correct.

Mr. SABATH. It has no reference to the jurisdiction of the committee, with the exception of what bills may be referred by the Speaker to that committee?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is correct.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I want to raise this question with the gentleman from New York as to the amendment offered in line 8: As I construe it, it would mean that the Speaker would have to refer any bill introduced hereafter which concerns any subject mentioned in the President's message to this select committee. For instance, suppose a bill comes in here dealing with salaries of the lower-grade employees. Under the language, as I understand it, that would have to go to this committee, because the question of salaries is dealt with in the President's message. Or if any bill came in here amending the act creating one of these commissions it would have to go to this committee. I think it has gone too far.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The purpose of that amendment is this: It was felt that the second sentence, beginning "all bills, resolutions", was limiting the first part, and that is why we added the words "concerning such subject matter", or relating to those matters.

I am not, of course, in a position to pass upon the exact question the gentleman raises. The subject matter of the President's message was Government reorganization. I think that is a fair, comprehensive description of it. Bills relating to this subject matter would be referred to this special committee.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, if this amendment is adopted and a bill comes in dealing with an amendment to the Social Security Act or to the Classification Act, let us say—these matters being mentioned in the President's message—would such bills be referred to this select committee, thereby tying up the jurisdiction of practically half the committees of the House?

The SPEAKER. In reply to the gentleman from Georgia, the Chair states that the Chair doubts the propriety, in advance of the decision of the pending matter, of undertaking to construe its legislative effect. The pending amendment was offered by the chairman of the Committee on Rules, and he has stated his interpretation of it. The Chair does not think the gentleman has submitted a proper parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be no confusion or misunderstanding, I may state to the gentleman from Georgia that this language was added as a perfecting amendment as the result of a conference between the Parliamentarian and myself. I do not, however, think it is indispensable, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw that portion of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that portion of the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to; and a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. In reference to the words in lines 7 and 8, "introduced in the House", a bill or resolution which came over from the Senate which, had it been introduced in the House, would go to this select committee, would then go to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, would it not?

The SPEAKER. Replying to the gentleman's inquiry, it is the present opinion of the Chair that any bills that came from the Senate would be introduced in the House by a message from the Senate and would properly be referred to this select committee if they were within the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. May I offer an amendment to the resolution at this time?

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been agreed to, the Chair will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and it is too late to offer any amendment.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made on the floor of the House yesterday and also to extend my remarks on the resignation from the committee assignments made by the minority of this House which I filed with the Speaker of this House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

JOINT CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, prior to calling up House Resolution 59, a rule, I should like to inquire if an agreement can be reached with the other side to save some time. This is a rule for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 81, setting up the Joint Committee on Government Organization. There would be an hour on the rule, an hour of general debate on the resolution, and then it would be read.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 81 and that the resolution be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole; and, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided and to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am extremely anxious to know what the administration plans to do in the matter of relief. I know it is popular with many to advocate the cutting of these expenditures, but in my district in Massachusetts a great hardship is being worked because people are being taken off relief rolls, people who are pitifully in need of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair states to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that there is no matter pending before the House.

The gentleman from New York is recognized.

The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That (a) there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Government Organization (hereinafter referred to as the joint committee).

(b) The joint committee shall be composed of seven Members of the Senate, appointed by the President of the Senate, and seven Members of the House of Representatives, appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee—

(a) To investigate the organization and activities of the departments, independent establishments, bureaus, boards, commissions, divisions, services, offices, and other agencies of the executive branch of the Government, with the view to determining whether, in the interest of simplification, efficiency, or economy, or in order to eliminate conflicting or overlapping activities, any of such organizations or units should be coordinated or consolidated with any other organization or unit, reorganized, or abolished, or the personnel thereof reduced; and

(b) To report, from time to time, to the Senate and the House of Representatives the results of its investigations, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

SEC. 3. The joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act at such places and times, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Amounts appropriated for the expenses of the joint committee shall be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House.

SEC. 4. The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary for the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. Officers and employees in the executive branch of the Government shall be detailed to the service of the joint committee, on its request, without additional compensation, and such officers and employees shall be paid from the appropriations regularly available for their salaries.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 21, after the word "advisable", insert the following: "Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of said joint committee, and shall be served by any person designated by him."

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, no doubt the argument will be made that on many occasions in the past special committees have been appointed or created by the House to do the very work now proposed and recommended by the President of the United States.

Nearly 10 years ago I joined with others in creating an efficiency committee, the accounts and expenditures committee, and other committees, but, unfortunately, we never gave them the power nor the jurisdiction which they should have to properly consider evidence supporting proposed legislation before the House.

The present resolution provides for the creation of a joint commission, to be composed of seven Members each of the House and the Senate. The Members of the House who serve on that commission are the same members of the select committee of the House which we have created by the resolution just passed. Such a commission would be highly productive of results by virtue of the powers it would enjoy—greater than those ever given a previous committee or commission.

There is no doubt but that a great deal of information has been compiled by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the President's committee, and the Brookings Institution, which promised to report the results of its survey to the House. This information will be ready for the joint commission and can be utilized by it.

I have the utmost confidence in the Speaker and in the Vice President, and am satisfied that only qualified and most experienced Members of the House and Senate, who can be depended upon to devote themselves to the task, will be appointed to the proposed commission.

In the past, numerous committees have devoted years of investigation to important subjects, only to have it later develop that their recommendations for legislation would be referred to committees having neither a knowledge of the particular matter nor time to study the recommendations made. The regularly constituted legislative committees were invariably unable to give proposed legislation the consideration it deserved. In my opinion, this was most unfortunate for Members of the House and for the people of the country as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the pending resolution will remedy this situation, and I feel that we may expect a much more efficient and economical consideration of legislation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. A little while ago we passed a resolution providing for the establishment of a committee of seven to be appointed by the Speaker. Why should we adopt another resolution providing for the same thing?

Mr. SABATH. The resolution to which the gentleman refers is one providing for a select committee of the House. This bill provides for a joint commission, composed of Members of both the House and the Senate. Therefore, Members of the House who are members of such commission, and also of the select committee of the House, having jurisdiction to report legislation and thoroughly investigate all matters, can bring about real action on the part of the House.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If we adopted Resolution 81 it gives the commission enough power to encompass all the authority we have given the other committee.

Mr. SABATH. But this commission will not have legislative power. The committee which we created by the resolution just passed has such power, and the personnel of the joint commission and the select committee will be the same; consequently the matter will be simplified, and will bring about favorable results, in my opinion.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If we adopt Resolution 81 I cannot see why we need what was passed awhile ago.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Does not the virtue in the pending resolution lie in the fact that in the set-up of this joint committee we get simultaneous treatment of the problem on the part of both Houses? In other words, it facilitates action by the Congress.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Georgia is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of anything that is more important at the present time than the simplification of the various departments of our Government. This matter has been talked of for a number of years, but very little has been accomplished. I hope this may be the beginning of action.

I may not be in sympathy with this resolution in its entirety, but so much criticism has been heaped on other committees for not getting action that I hope the chairman of the Rules Committee and the chairmen of the other committees of the House mean to do something at this time.

Last year the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, appointed a committee to make an investigation of overlapping in the various departments of our Government, but I do not believe they have made a report; at least, I have not seen it. The Senate appointed a committee for the same purpose and I believe have made a report. The President of the United States appointed a commission and that commission has made a report.

It seems to me the Speaker of the House of Representatives should try to get capable men on this committee and these Members ought to be able to submit a report in, we will say, 60 to 75 days. That would be by March 15.

If you will let this resolution go through without providing for a time within which to bring in a report or bill, the committee will not be worth any more than past committees.

I hope before we conclude the consideration of this joint resolution you will give consideration to the fact that we want to get action, and I would also ask the Members of the House to take into consideration some of the things that have been reported in a statement which may be found tabulated in the Appendix of the RECORD on pages 26 to 28. This comes from a committee report of the Senate. For me to read it now would be taking up your time unnecessarily, but before we adopt this resolution will not the chairman of the Rules Committee try to inculcate in this bill a definite time when this committee must report a bill. If you do this, I believe you will get action.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Of course, this joint committee does not report any bills whatever.

Mr. RICH. Are they not going to submit a bill to us for action?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The committee appointed under the resolution just passed will report.

Mr. RICH. I wanted to put an amendment on that bill requiring them to report by March 15, but the Speaker ruled it out of order. You can find a way to do anything here if you will only do it and you ought to come in here and fix a definite time so that we may be sure of accomplishing something.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. How would April 1 suit the gentleman?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the special or select committee of the House set up under Resolution 60 is the House part of the joint committee established under House Joint Resolution 81.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It is expected the Speaker will appoint the same persons.

Mr. SNELL. That is what I understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. VINSON of Kentucky). The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the joint committee—

(a) To investigate the organization and activities of the departments, independent establishments, bureaus, boards, commissions, divisions, services, offices, and other agencies of the executive branch of the Government, with the view to determining whether, in the interest of simplification, efficiency, or economy, or in order to eliminate conflicting or overlapping activities, any of such organizations or units should be coordinated or consolidated with any other organization or unit, reorganized, or abolished, or the personnel thereof reduced; and

(b) To report, from time to time, to the Senate and the House of Representatives the results of its investigations, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of New York: Page 2, line 5, strike out "the executive branch of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The joint committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act at such places and times, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. Amounts appropriated for the expenses of the joint committee shall be disbursed one-half by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 21, after the word "advisable" and the period, insert "Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of said joint committee, and shall be served by any person designated by him."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The joint committee shall have power to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary for the performance of its duties, but the compensation so fixed shall not exceed the compensation fixed under the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, for comparable duties. Officers and employees in the executive branch of the Government shall be detailed to the service of the joint committee, on its request, without additional compensation, and such officers and employees shall be paid from the appropriations regularly available for their salaries.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR of New York: Page 3, line 7, strike out "in the executive branch."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1937.

Hon. W. B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, effective immediately.

Sincerely yours,

LLOYD THURSTON.

The resignation was accepted.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

January 14, 1937.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

JOHN W. GWYNNE.

APPOINTMENT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 64

Resolved, That JOHN W. GWYNNE, of Iowa, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, the following leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MAPES, leave of absence for today, on account of illness.

To Mr. ELLENBOGEN, for an indefinite period, on account of illness.

To Mr. LANHAM (at the request of Mr. JOHNSON of Texas), indifinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. BIERMANN, until January 20, on account of business in his district.

RESIGNATION FROM COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

MR. SPEAKER: The Republican minority having filed its resolution on committee appointments, and the same having been duly adopted by the House, I hereby tender my resignation from all committees to which I was named by the Republican minority for the following reasons, to wit——

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it proper to give the reasons for resigning from committees?

The SPEAKER. It has been done before. The Clerk will proceed.

First. I received no committee assignments from the minority in the Seventy-fourth Congress, save three minor committees. I endeavored to serve on these to the best of my ability, believing that in the Seventy-fifth Congress I might be advanced.

Second. Instead of being advanced I was left on the same committees and actually demoted in rank to the tail-end kite of a discredited political party. I was fully advised of the punishment in store for me if I did not support Mr. SNELL for the speakership. I refused to support him for the good of the Republican Party, and this action has been the result.

Third. I am not in sympathy with the present leadership of the Republican Party in this House and will not accept this demonstration of party punishment.

USHER L. BURDICK.

The resignation was accepted.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 59

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to lay House Resolution 59 on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY STRIKE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the House to the situation existing in Michigan, where an attempt is being made by John L. Lewis and the C. I. O. to wreck the American Federation of Labor, and to an article appearing in the Chicago Tribune under a headline which states that "Thousands of Ohio strikers rush to join Flint rioters", and to further statements in the Michigan papers that delegations from Toledo and other Ohio cities are marching into Michigan to assist the "downsitters" in holding possession of the plants at Flint and elsewhere.

THE RIGHT TO WORK—THE MANNER IN WHICH THE COOPERATION OF INDUSTRY IS RECEIVED

Throughout the country the press, shortly after the November election, carried the information that the President, during the new administration, would hold out the olive branch to industry and that he hoped for its cooperation in solving, among others, the questions of unemployment and the balancing of the Budget.

Referring in his message of January 8 to the question of the amount of funds which would be needed for relief during the year 1938, the President expressed a hope that it would not exceed the sum of $1,537,123,000, and then said:

This hope is based on the assumption that industry will cooperate in employing men and women from the relief rolls in larger numbers than during the past year.

He had previously, in his message of January 6, told us that the problems which confronted the Government in March of 1933 had by his administration been overcome, and that by the cooperation of Congress he had been able—

To solve difficulties of extraordinary magnitude and ramification with few important errors, and at a cost cheap when measured by the immediate necessities and the eventual results.

On the same day we were told by him that—

It is important, of course, that every man and woman in this country be able to find work, that every factory run, that business as a whole earn profits. But government in a democratic nation does not exist solely, or even primarily, for that purpose. * * *

The deeper purpose of democratic government is to assist as many of its citizens as possible—especially those who need it most—to improve their conditions of life, to retain all personal liberty which does not adversely affect their neighbors, and to pursue the happiness which comes with security and an opportunity for recreation and culture.

Not a person in this Congress but who realizes that our return to recovery was led by the motor industries of Michigan. All know, if they have seen fit to advise themselves, that it was through the industry, the ability, the management, and the possession of resources which had been accumulated by the motor industry in the State of Michigan during the preceding years that that industry was enabled to give employment throughout the depression to hundreds of thousands of workers who otherwise would have been without the means of livelihood.

All know that because of this great industry the burden of relief laid upon State and Nation was greatly lessened.

Notwithstanding statements to the contrary, it is true that in no other industry, in no other State, have the wage earners as a class received as high a rate of compensation—an average of 78 cents per hour—as steady employment, under as good working conditions as have the workers in the motor industry in Michigan, and the average weekly earnings of workers in that industry in November of 1936 were about 40 percent higher than the average of 25 other manufacturing industries.

That industry produced a product which was ever growing better at a lessening price, and, miracle of miracles, it did this at a time when it was earning a profit for its stockholders, putting into each finished unit a greater amount of labor at a higher wage rate than at any time in its previous history.

And at the same time that wage, notwithstanding the increase in the cost of farm products, in the cost of living as a whole, I repeat, that wage had a greater purchasing value than at any time in the previous history of the industry.

Travel back, if you will, a few short months or years in political history and you find that throughout the first campaign of the President and throughout his first administration and into the second there was carried the thought time and time again, bitterly expressed in no uncertain terms, that capital and industry and business were unfair to labor and that the day must come when there would be a reckoning.

Businessmen and manufacturers, as a class, were branded as economic royalists, as exploiters of child labor, as slave drivers. All know that there are some capitalists and some businessmen, as there are men in every walk of life, in every profession, who will take advantage unfairly of their fellow men. All know, too, that the charge so bitterly and repeatedly made would inevitably arouse class prejudice and class hatred, and all knew that the charge, when applied to all businessmen, to all industrialists, was absolutely false. Yet exceptions were not made.

By the making of this charge and the expenditure of untold amounts of the taxpayers' money in every conceivable way there was drawn to the banner of the Democratic candidate a vast army of voters. John L. Lewis and the C. I. O., William F. Green and the American Federation of Labor, hundreds of thousands of farmers, relief workers, and those holding Federal jobs—all yielded to the urge to vote for one who claimed so large a part in recovery—this in utter disregard of the fact that previous depressions had dissipated their force in far less time and with a greater degree of recovery than the present one. As Al Smith said, "No one wants to shoot Santa Claus."

It has been openly charged, whether truthfully or not I have no information, but at least with no widespread denial in the public press, that strikes were withheld until after election day in order that the election result might not be affected.

Almost immediately following the election, trouble began, and the new year saw a bitter fight in the ranks of organized labor itself. The new year witnessed the drive of the C. I. O., under the leadership of John L. Lewis, to force the closed shop upon American industry and to wreck the A. F. of L.

Although its membership was hopelessly in the minority, in the motor industries of Michigan and in many other places, that minority membership saw fit to engage in a so-called "sit down" strike. By this method this small minority has thrown out of employment, directly and indirectly, hundreds of thousands of workingmen who desire to continue in their jobs. It has thrown upon the relief rolls other hundreds of thousands, and, if permitted to continue in its attitude, the total cost cannot be estimated.

In Flint, Mich., we find a minority of the workers taking, and by force retaining, possession of the factories and equipment and forcing hundreds of thousands of men who desire to work and to support themselves to remain idle. Reliable press information is that in one group of 9,300, 9,000 desire to work, while 300 are holding possession of the factory.

And on what pretext do they do this? Their demand, and the demand of their leadership, is—and about this there is no doubt—that the owners of those plants must recognize their union and deal with, and only with, the heads of that organization on questions which affect the interests of the workers. No more unpatriotic, unlawful, or unfair proposition could be advanced.

Lewis would determine the hours of labor, the wage to be paid, the conditions surrounding the worker, and designate who should and who should not work; in short, he would take over the management of the motor industry except as to that part of it which would place upon his shoulders the responsibility of providing funds, materials, and the production of the finished product. Who condones and upholds this lawless conduct?

The morning papers quote the Governor of Michigan as saying that he will not aid the prosecutor of Genesee County, where Flint is located, to enforce warrants issued against those who are retaining possession of these factories, thus denying assistance to enforce the law of the land; further, that he will insist that the owners of the factories, the factory management, heat the buildings, so that the strikers may remain in comfort and that the relief authorities will see that they do not lack for food.

The Governor of the State of Michigan says that he will maintain law and order, that no force will be permitted to be used by either side, thus unquestionably denying to the owners of the Flint factories, to the men who desire to work therein, their rights guaranteed under the Constitution.

Mr. Lewis is quoted in this morning's New York papers as saying that he was entirely satisfied with the progress of the strike, the object of which, he said, was to stop production, and he made the further statement that "production is being stopped on a progressive basis."

He further said:

I have just been informed by representatives of Gov. Frank Murphy, of Michigan, that the forces of the State will not be used to evacuate the stay-in strikers at General Motors; that they will be protected from assault.

The press generally contains the statement that hundreds and even thousands of strike sympathizers are moving from Ohio up into the State of Michigan.

Apparently Governor Murphy intends to permit nonresidents to move into the State to assist the "sit-down" strikers in maintaining their illegal possession of the factories, which would otherwise give employment, aid in recovery, lessen the relief roll, but he will not aid Michigan's own citizens nor protect them in their constitutional rights.

There is no claim—there can be done—that these "sit down" strikers own the factories or have any legal right therein. Yet, in defiance of law, they have taken and are holding possession, and they are backed, if the newspaper reports be true, by the Governor of the State.

THE RIGHT TO A JOB

The administration rode into power on a plea for the "forgotten man"; a denunciation of the privileged few; a plea for the right to work at a living wage which would guarantee an American standard of living.

In this strike the "forgotten man" is the one who is deprived of his opportunity to work by the privileged few, headed by one of the President's chief supporters, John L. Lewis. State and Federal Government, by nonactivity, by failing to uphold the law, are giving assistance to those who have taken, and are unlawfully holding, possession of other people's property.

In his appeal for an investigation, following the President's lead, in an attempt to creat prejudice and class feeling, John L. Lewis makes the statement, if the press be correct, that General Motors tried for 6 months to drive the President out of the White House; "they are now turning around and trying to drive organized labor out of their plants." What he should have said was that they refused to permit him to act as a dictator for labor. He wishes to rule by force. He is by force retaining possession of these factories.

If they did the first, it was their right, under the Constitution, and certainly the President is not presumed to be a party to an illegal attack upon all who did not vote for him. Equally true is it that General Motors has the right to the possession of its plants.

Going back to the President's statement of January 6, repeating that statement:

> The deeper purpose of democratic government is to assist as many of its citizens as possible, especially those who need it most, to improve their conditions of life, to retain all personal liberty which does not adversely affect their neighbors.

If this be his purpose, then why does he permit a minority, or even if it be a majority, to deprive citizens of their property; to deprive hundreds of thousands of workingmen of their opportunity to work at wages under conditions which are satisfactory to them?

Why is it that his personal friend, the man who came from the Philippine Islands to aid him in his campaign in Michigan, who is now the chief executive officer of that State, permits men without authority of law to seize and hold possession of the property of others and, by their actions, to deprive honest, conscientious, thrifty American citizens of their opportunity to earn the funds, not only to support themselves and their families, but give them an opportunity for "recreation and culture", two of the objectives mentioned by the President?

Until this administration learns that it cannot sow the wind without reaping the whirlwind, until it learns that "As ye sow, so shall ye reap", until it learns that property rights, the right to work, as guaranteed under the Constitution of this country, cannot be violated or taken from the citizen without bringing disaster to the country as a whole, the trouble will continue.

A word from the President to the Governor of the State of Michigan, suggesting to him that he see that Federal and State constitutional rights are guaranteed to property owners and to workers will end this intolerable situation. A Cleveland or a Coolidge would not have hesitated for a moment, and the problem would have been solved.

The motor industry is not only willing but eager to keep people off the relief rolls. The workers in the motor industry are anxious to stay off of relief. But how can industry cooperate, how can it aid in balancing the Budget by giving work, giving jobs, when the executive authority of State and Nation permits the very factories which provide this employment to remain in the hands of those who say to the workers, "Thou shalt not work"?

A little cooperation from the Government would undoubtedly aid in solving the problem.

The facts demonstrate—

First. That this strike is an attempt to destroy the American Federation of Labor.

Second. That when businessmen do cooperate, as, for instance, in the motor industry, by the giving of employment, the Federal Government, instead of encouraging their efforts, gives at least tacit support to those who would close the factories.

Third. That these strikes are the direct outgrowth of the teachings and the encouragement given by the President to John L. Lewis and his followers and by his statements that economic royalists, entrenched greed, and international bankers were depriving them of a fair opportunity to share in profits.

Fourth. That by the failure of the Governor of Michigan and a like failure on the part of the President to protect the citizen—that is, the factory owner in his right to possession of his property, which in this case would insure the giving of employment to hundreds of thousands—the administration is actually retarding recovery, encouraging lawlessness, and assisting in the destruction of the American Federation of Labor.

Fifth. That by a failure to act, the Governor of Michigan and the President are permitting, if not sanctioning, mob rule.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 15, 1937

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, giver of every good and perfect gift, who hast revealed Thyself to us in the person of Thy dear Son; bless, we pray Thee, our land with increase, and satisfy her poor with bread.

Grant sight to all who are blinded by luxury, and deliverance to those who are bound by want, that the rich may follow the holy simplicity of Christ, and the poor be made partakers of the inheritance of the meek. Draw us close to Thee and to each other with the cords of love, so that all men may discover the way that leadeth to salvation, both in the life that now is and in the life that is to come. We ask it through the mercy of Him who, for our sakes, became poor, that we through His poverty might be made rich, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

CONTINUATION OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The calendar under rule VIII is in order.

Mr. GLASS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 415, providing for a continuation of the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 415) to continue the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provision of law, until the close of business on June 30, 1939, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform under law, and the liquidation and winding up of the Corporation's affairs as provided for by section 13 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, are hereby postponed during the period that functions of the Corporation are continued pursuant to this act: Provided, That in order to facilitate the withdrawal of the credit activities of the Corporation when from time to time during such period the President finds, upon a report of the Board of Directors of the Corporation or otherwise, that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the directors to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority for such time or times as he may deem advisable.

SEC. 2. (a) Section 7 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (Public, No. 1, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "April 1, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "the close of business on June 30, 1939"; section 1 of the act approved March 31, 1936 (Public, No. 484, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "February 1, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "the close of business on June 30, 1939"; section 9 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (Public, No. 1, 74th Cong.), is hereby amended by striking from the first sentence thereof "June 16, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "the close of business on June 30, 1939."

(b) The agencies referred to in the acts referred to in subdivision (a) of this section, and the RFC Mortgage Co., shall be deemed to be established by or pursuant to law within the meaning of section 7 (a) of the First Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1936.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, page 1, line 4, it is proposed to strike out "June 30, 1939" and in lieu thereof to insert "June 30, 1938", so as to read:

That notwithstanding any other provision of law, until the close of business on June 30, 1938, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized to continue to perform all functions which it is authorized to perform under law, and the liquidation and winding up of the Corporation's affairs as provided for by section 13 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, are hereby postponed during the period that functions of the Corporation are continued pursuant to this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, it was with much reluctance that yesterday I objected to the immediate consideration of Senate bill 415, offered by my colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I was impelled to do this because an extension for 2½ years longer of emergency agencies created by Congress only for the period of the emergency would, in my judgment, seriously interfere with an effective reorganization of the machinery of government. I thought it a reasonable request that these emergency agencies be continued only to July 1, 1938. Then Congress could extend them further if the necessity arose.

The Brookings Institution, employed jointly by the President's committee and the Senate and House committees, has made certain recommendations affecting these emergency agencies, and certainly these recommendations should at least receive consideration from Congress before July 1, 1939.

Senate bill 415 not only extends the loaning authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but likewise extends the life of the following emergency agencies of Government: The Commodity Credit Corporation, which does not expire until April 1; the Export-Import Bank, which does not expire until June 16; the RFC Mortgage Corporation, which does not expire until June 30; and the Electric Home and Farm Authority, which expires on February 1.

It is true that these agencies are financed through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, but no haste for immediate action exists with respect to either the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Export-Import Bank, or the RFC Mortgage Corporation. In fact, there is time for full consideration and discussion of the extension of the loaning powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and of the Electric Home and Farm Authority, both of which expire February 1. We were informed at the beginning of this session that ample opportunity would be given for debate on all measures.

No Member of the Senate has a higher personal respect than have I for Mr. Jesse Jones, the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and his colleagues. With a business efficiency and a scrupulous regard for the saving of the taxpayers' money, Mr. Jones has won the confidence and respect of all American citizens. What I say today I do not want in any way to be construed as any reflection upon him, but as a discussion of the question of the extension of emergency agencies of government in relation to an effective reorganization.

The pending bill would extend all five of the above-named agencies for a period of 2½ years, or until July 1, 1939. It is true that authority would be given to the President to withdraw the loaning facilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the Export-Import Bank, to the Commodity Credit Corporation, to the Electric Home and Farm Authority, and to the RFC Mortgage Corporation; but why extend them for 2 years and 6 months if the reorganization is to be made effective sooner?

We have 19 emergency agencies of the Government created in the stress and trial of the crisis. Congress recognized them as such and provided for their termination on definite dates.

One of the most difficult problems in the reorganization of the Federal Government is to determine definitely whether or not emergency functions should be made permanent. This decision should be made by Congress, as Congress created these agencies. It is for Congress to say whether or not functions of government regarded as proper during the emergency should be frozen into the general structure of the Government.

Reorganization, whether accomplished by the President or by Congress, cannot be effective until July 1, 1938. The Budget now before Congress provides for no economies for the year beginning July 1, 1937, and ending July 1, 1938. The most to be hoped for by those of us who believe that the time has come for a substantial reduction in public spending, the elimination of waste, extravagance, and duplicated effort is retrenchment and reform beginning July 1, 1938.

I am opposing the pending bill in its present form because, first, it extends these emergency activities for 2 years and 6 months, or until July 1, 1939, and this applies not only to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation but to the other five emergency agencies. If the bill is passed, it will mean that the other 14 emergency agencies will without doubt be given the same status, and it is likely that reorganization will be deferred until the expiration date of the emergency agencies on July 1, 1939.

I, for one, cannot agree that the crisis which made necessary, and in the opinion of many very desirable, the creation of these emergency agencies will continue to exist for the next two and a half years. In fact, we have been told the emergency is largely over.

The best time to abolish a bureau or agency is on the date of its termination. If continued, such agencies will remain indefinitely among the functions of our Government.

I am further opposed to the bill because there is no haste necessary in enacting legislation for the extension of three of the agencies involved, namely, the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Export-Import Bank, and the RFC Mortgage Corporation. I think that each of these emergency agencies should stand on merit and not be covered by the cloak of popularity of the distinguished Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and should come before Congress for full discussion.

In connection with the R. F. C., and especially because of its admirable management by Mr. Jones, I desire to call to the attention of the Senate a condition reported by the Brookings Institution. This condition should be corrected, not only for the sake of understandable bookkeeping but in justice to the R. F. C.

The Federal Treasury carries as assets on its semiannual statement notes and stock of the R. F. C. to the amount of $4,295,000,000. The public, knowing the R. F. C. as a lending agency and having confidence in its management, believes that the notes and stock are an actual asset as represented by recoverable and sound loans. This claim has been publicly made from time to time, and the amount of the alleged assets of the R. F. C. has been deducted from the public debt in numerous debates and public speeches.

The fact is that of this amount, $2,434,025,943 is represented by payments by the R. F. C. to other governmental agencies for expenses, and most of these advances are not recoverable. Included in these advances is an item of $1,500,000,000 for direct relief and expended by Mr. Hopkins. Certainly this is not recoverable.

A condensed statement of the assets and liabilities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as of September 30, 1936, follows:

Securities purchased from Public Works Administration	$140,477,550
Loans and allocations to Federal governmental agencies	2,434,025,943

Mr. President, as to that item, I make the statement—and I make it advisedly—that not 20 percent will be recoverable to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; yet, insofar as the statement of the Treasury is concerned, the total notes held by the United States Treasury are listed as assets of the United States Government.

I continue reading the list:

Interest on funds allocated to Federal agencies	$20,710,323
Preferred stock installment contracts	724,661
Cash	1,055,074
Collateral purchased	3,512,411
Accrued interest and dividends	31,015,075
Furniture and fixtures	542,621
Miscellaneous	2,486,771
Total	4,744,305,128

LIABILITIES

Liabilities for funds held as cash collateral and deposited with bids	3,293,656
Funds held for other agencies	5,941,100
Trust funds	33,687,142
Notes	4,011,749,667
Accrued interest	8,297,118
Stock	500,000,000
Surplus and reserves	141,487,720
Miscellaneous liabilities	39,848,725
Total	4,744,305,128

It will be seen that something less than one half the liabilities of the Corporation are covered by claims against nongovernmental agencies, the other half representing funds which have been disbursed for relief or used for the purchase of capital stock in other governmental corporations, to furnish them funds for loan operations, and to pay their operating expenses. The stock of the Corporation and $3,795,000,000 of its notes as of July 31, 1936, are owned by the United States Treasury. The notes held by the Treasury are therefore in large part simply a bookkeeping offset against Reconstruction Finance Corporation nominal claims for funds which have been routed through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and used for relief and other emergency purposes.

The funds had been allocated and disbursed to other Federal governmental agencies, up to September 30, 1936, as follows, and much of this is for ordinary expenses of government:

Secretary of Agriculture for crop loans	$115,000,000
Capital of regional agricultural credit corporations	20,000,000
Governor of Farm Credit Administration	40,500,000

Regional agricultural credit corporations, for expenses	$14,576,843
Secretary of the Treasury to pay for capital of Federal home-loan banks	104,542,000
Secretary of the Treasury to pay for capital of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation	200,000,000
Land bank commissioner and Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation for loans to joint-stock land banks and to farmers	202,600,000
Federal Housing Administration	44,000,000
Commodity Credit Corporation, purchase of stock	97,000,000
Loans to Commodity Credit Corporation	95,808,924
For direct relief	1,499,998,176
Total	2,434,025,943

And then the R. F. C. takes credit for $20,710,322 for interest on the advances it has made to the other departments of government.

Mr. President, I am unable to understand this method of bookkeeping, and I sought by inquiry to ascertain the reason for this devious method of making direct expenditures. The only explanation I received from any Government official was that the reason may have been to avoid large totals in the regular appropriation bills. But, whatever the reasons, such a policy should be discontinued, and a correct statement given of the actual value of the R. F. C. notes carried as assets on the public balance sheet of the Treasury.

These notes, by reason of these diversions, are not worth 50 cents on the dollar in recoverable assets, notwithstanding the splendid management of the R. F. C. in making safe loans. The reports of the R. F. C. make clear these diversions, but the reports of the Treasury do not.

Immediately, I hope, the Secretary of the Treasury will appraise the value of the R. F. C. notes now carried at face value as assets of the Government, and write off the diversion of such funds, so that a true statement of the value of the R. F. C. notes and stock may be arrived at.

Mr. President, I should like now, just briefly, to refer to a subject in which I have been very deeply interested; that is, the reorganization of the Federal Government for the purpose of economy and efficiency.

We hear a great deal said lately about efficiency. I believe in economy as well as efficiency. In fact, economy is a main part of governmental efficiency. If we can give to the people for 75 cents the same public service that is now costing $1, that is both efficiency and economy; and that is what I think we should strive to do.

Mr. President, we have heard some estimates made as to the savings that may be brought about by a reorganization of the Government. If the Brookings Institution is correct—and that is an unbiased, nonpartisan organization, employed jointly by the President's committee, by the Senate committee, and the House committee, having no bias or partisanship attached to it—the consolidation of two emergency agencies now doing similar work, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal Housing Administration, will save $25,000,000 yearly. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation has 18,059 employees and the Federal Housing Administration 3,660, with duplicated offices all over the United States, both renting space for offices when they could be consolidated, as they are doing practically the same work. This is only one of the many mergers and consolidations that will save substantial sums to the taxpayers.

Of course, we cannot reduce expenditures unless we have the courage to stop spending unnecessary public money in duplicated and overlapping activities.

Retrenchment as such is always unpopular, no matter how obvious the need, no matter how necessary the results and how greatly to be desired. Efficiency is always exacting. The economical way is the hard way in anything. But there are times in the histories of governments, as in the lives of individuals, when these things must be brought about if we are to continue on an even course in the pursuit of national happiness. Such a time, I think, is upon us.

I believe the country wants a thorough reorganization here at Washington—one that will not merely be a regrouping or revamping of boards, bureaus, and commissions but the abolition of many bureaus and boards and the transfer of necessary activities to existing agencies, so that actual economy in reduction of cost will result.

One of our great problems, as I have stated, is the 19 boards, commissions, and bureaus that will expire in 1937. Congress established these activities to meet an emergency, and the country was so informed. To regroup these emergency agencies now in permanent branches of the Government means, in my judgment, continuance of such functions after the emergency is over, perhaps for all time to come.

Never before in our history has there been such an opportunity as now exists for a constructive reorganization of the Federal Government—a reorganization that will save the taxpayers large sums and substitute simplicity for confusion without impairing the objectives of Congress and the President; a reorganization that will eliminate duplicated efforts, simplify the processes of government, and reduce red tape and the consequent annoyance to the American citizen who of necessity must have business dealings with his Government and finds himself confronted by several departments with overlapping authority.

We as Members of Congress are trustees for the taxpayer's dollar, and our obligation is to make it buy the fullest value.

The manifold activities of Government must be systematized and directed with maximum efficiency.

No essential agency should be starved, but saving should be found in consolidation and simplification.

Unless the Government simplifies itself, it will defeat its own objectives. Most objectives are gained only by the most simple, direct, and efficient methods.

The Federal machine has become so top-heavy and unwieldy as to defeat, by conflicting activity and needless red tape, the accomplishment of purposes for which legislation has been passed. This has resulted in a tremendous expenditure for overhead administration; and excess overhead cost is simply a waste of public money.

The fact is, we are emerging from the depression loaded up with the greatest and most costly bureaucracy in all history. In addition to the previous accumulation of independent agencies, we have been saddled with nearly half again as many as we had in 1932. Some of them are proper. Others overlap. Some have outlived their usefulness or have been superseded. Most of the new ones were set up in a time of crisis, with virtually no regard for how they fitted into a coordinated Federal Government pattern. There are glaring cases of duplicated effort. Some of the agencies actually have been found competing with themselves. Where before the Government was complex, it is now confusing.

To point out 50 Federal agency legal divisions in Washington is enough to describe the Federal jungle.

There have been at least 24 agencies—I do not mean that all of them have been established recently—concerned with lending Government funds. Five others are in liquidation.

There have been at least three agencies concerned with insuring deposits and loans.

There have been at least 34 agencies concerned with acquisition of land.

There have been at least 16 agencies concerned with wildlife preservation.

There have been at least 10 agencies concerned with Government construction.

There have been at least nine agencies concerned with credit and finance.

There have been at least a dozen agencies concerned with home and community planning.

There have been at least 10 agencies concerned with materials of construction.

There are innumerable other instances of glaringly obvious overlapping functions and useless agencies. The duplication is apparent not only in Washington but in every nook and corner of the country. Agency offices at the seat of the Government are sprawled from Alexandria, Va., to Baltimore, Md. The Social Security Board recently advertised for office space in the District of Columbia and did not get a single bid. It took one unit to Baltimore.

An example of the situation here is the Resettlement Administration, with 13 separate Washington addresses.

There are 46 personnel officers listed here for the Government.

Available Federal records show 104 information and publications offices here.

One hundred and twenty-six Federal agency libraries are listed in the District of Columbia.

There are 51 traffic managers here whose duties are to arrange for personnel transportation, freight in some instances, and sometimes to make purchases.

It is estimated that there are hundreds of ex-newspapermen employed by the Federal Government in the press sections which have become such prolific adjuncts to the numerous agencies.

In 1930 the Federal and District Governments paid in Washington alone for 17,142 telephones. In 1936 the number increased to 32,882.

In Washington alone the Federal Government now has 114,792 listed civil executive employees, as announced by the Civil Service Commission, not including those on judicial, executive, military, and relief pay rolls. This is comparable to the number employed on Armistice Day, November 11, 1918, when we were fighting a war for our existence as an independent Nation. We now have twice as many employees in Washington alone as we had in the prosperous days of 1927.

Uncle Sam pays an annual rent bill of $25,000,000. If he paid taxes on his own property, the Washington collector alone would demand $6,000,000 per year.

More new jobs have been created since 1933 than during the first century of the Nation's existence, and even now we are still adding at the rate of nearly 100 new employees for each day in every month. That is the exact average of the additions since the 1st of last July.

In 1916 our total annual cost of government, including interest on the public debt, was $1,000,000,000.

The interest on our public debt alone is now nearly as great as the total cost of government in 1916. Today we are spending more than eight times the amount we spent in 1916. This is not by any means all due to recovery and relief. Eliminating recovery and relief, we are spending now six times as much as we spent in 1916, and the new Budget starting next July gives very little hope for a substantial reduction in public spending.

But to me the most astonishing result of my investigation is the increase in Federal activities outside of Washington. On March 1, 1933, the Federal Government leased 6,084 buildings or parts of buildings outside of Washington. In the period from March 1, 1933, to July 1, 1936, the Government built 664 new buildings, at a cost of $239,000,000. Yet on July 1, 1936, notwithstanding the construction of the new buildings, the number of leased buildings outside of Washington was increased to 11,842, so that the number was doubled in a period of 3 years and 4 months. Figures are available only to July 1, 1936, and today the number is even greater.

The amount of floor space is a good index of the activity of a business, insofar as the clerks and others connected with it are concerned. The floor space of leased and Government-owned buildings outside of Washington on July 1, 1936, amounted to 102,319,199 square feet, as compared with 56,239,294 square feet of Government leased and owned buildings as of March 1, 1933, showing an increase in the floor space of Government owned and leased buildings outside of Washington within a period of 3 years and 4 months of nearly 100 percent.

None of these figures include Military Establishment or veterans' hospital space or public-health buildings.

The magnitude of our expansion outside of Washington is illustrated by the fact that we lease or own office space equivalent to 52 Empire State Buildings, or more than one Empire State Building for each State in the Union, and I repeat, this does not include the floor space of buildings owned or leased in the city of Washington. This surprised me, because I was under the impression, as perhaps other Senators were, that the main increase in governmental activities had occurred in Washington itself. Yet it appears that coincident with the expansion at Washington an equal or greater expansion has been made outside.

No one will deny the need for governmental simplification. No greater service to the new policies of government adopted by Congress can now be rendered than to promote a governmental reorganization to administer these policies in the most direct, simple, and economical manner.

As the emergency passes, I do not believe the country will long submit to Federal expenditures at the rate of 10 percent of our present national income for normal expenses, excluding recovery and relief, of the Federal Government alone.

Mr. President, if the Secretary of Commerce is correct when he estimates the gross income of this country, as he did the other day, then the Federal Government alone for normal expenses is spending 10 percent of the total gross income of the Nation, and that does not include the taxation imposed by different municipalities, States, and other taxing units.

Justification perhaps existed for extravagance in the creation of new bureaus during the trial and stress of the emergency, but now, with the passing of the crisis, such extravagance should and must be eliminated.

There is no legitimate fault to be found with increasing the sound service of our Government in response to reasonable demands of modern times by those things necessary for our protection and progress. It is right that government should progress in a measure commensurate with the progress of our civilization and the growing complexity of our social and economic life, but by the same token the Government should constantly strive for the same economy and efficiency exacted of citizens by the advances in other phases of progress. That applies not only to the Federal Government, but to the multitude of State, city, township and county, and district governments as well. How else can we survive the demands of the Federal Government and hundreds of thousands of local and district governments?

Mr. President, I appreciate greatly the consideration and attention given to what I have said by the Members of the Senate. I am offering the amendment so as to limit the life of the emergency agencies to July 1, 1938.

As I have before stated, if there is to be a reorganization of the Government, it should become effective on that date. We cannot expect it to become to any large degree effective before then, because the Budget for the year July 1, 1937, to July 1, 1938, has been submitted to us.

Mr. President, I can see no good reason for refusing this request, coming from one who has given his time to an investigation of the conditions in the governmental departments, who has been appointed as chairman of the committee on the reorganization, who has certain pertinent, definite suggestions to make when the reports are submitted, as prepared by the Brookings Institution, with respect to these particular departments. I hope the Senate will decide to limit the life of these emergency departments to July 1, 1938.

Let me call to the attention of the Senate the fact that if the emergency shall continue next year, such activities as are necessary can easily be continued by joint resolution passed by the Congress a year from now. But why now continue these particular organizations for 2 years and 6 months from this time?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. BYRD. Certainly.

Mr. KING. There is some necessity why the Reconstruction Finance Corporation should have its life prolonged for another year or for 2 years. Upon what theory is it necessary to yoke a measure to accomplish that result with provision for a continuance of the life of other organizations referred to by the Senator?

Mr. BYRD. I should say that the only reason is that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation finances the other particular corporations. The pending measure would not only continue the lending power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation but it would continue the life of the other five organizations as well.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I merely desire to say, in further answer to the question of the Senator from

Utah, that the agencies which would be continued under the bill now before the Senate are instrumentalities through which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation operates and functions, and it was thought desirable by the committee that their life be extended for the same period during which the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is to be extended, namely to June 30, 1939.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, of course I have no comment to make upon the very impressive statement made by my colleague as to the imperative need of curtailing governmental agencies and reducing public expenditures. I venture to say that no Member of this body has more persistently—and some people think violently—denounced wasteful public expenditures than have I, and if I could think the enactment of the bill unanimously reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency would involve the wasteful expenditure of a single dollar, I would not advocate it.

I have the greatest respect for my colleague's capabilities in the matter of the reorganization of the Government. He did an amazingly splendid job along that line in the State of Virginia, for which he was not only commended by his own Commonwealth but by many of the other States of the Union. But I do not believe that questions of that sort are involved in the matter now before the Senate, which I think is a very simple proposition, as to whether or not the Senate desires to extend the life of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That is all the pending bill provides.

The agencies cited by my colleague are practically parts of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, for the simple reason that they cannot operate without its sanction. Every dollar they have expended has come, as it must come, from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

With the utmost confidence I, for one, accepted the suggestion of the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that he be given the requested period of time in which to continue his work and to liquidate the Corporation. I think the difference in time occasioned by providing that the effective date shall be the end of the fiscal year is not worth much agitation; and had that question been presented to the committee when it originally acted, I do not know that it would have met with any particular objection.

Mr. President, we all know how the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has been administered. No agency of this Government has been administered with efficiency comparable to that of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. I think the fear of my colleague that the passage of the pending bill would set a precedent for the continuation of all emergency agencies is not well founded, for the reason that Jesse Jones is not at the head of all emergency Federal agencies, but he is at the head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the net results of his administration will show that he has saved the Federal Government hundreds of millions of dollars and that he has earned for the Government a great many million dollars. That is the whole of it. We are dealing with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the agencies allied with and practically under the jurisdiction of that Corporation.

I am not going to vote for the continuance of other agencies unless it shall be shown that they are absolutely necessary. I am not advocating anything of that nature, and do not regard the action we are now asked to take as any precedent for the continuance of the other agencies cited by my distinguished colleague.

The question is a very simple one, as to whether or not we are willing to trust Chairman Jones with the continuance of his operations for another two and a half years. In this connection I feel authorized to say that I am assured by the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that he is liquidating the allied agencies as rapidly as he possibly and reasonably can and that he proposes to continue to do so.

So far as the Export-Import Bank is concerned, I never did think it was worth a "thripens", or that it ought ever to have been established, for that matter.

So far as the Commodity Credit Corporation is concerned, I am assured by the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation that it is being liquidated as rapidly as possible.

Therefore I think there need be no fear whatsoever on the part of the Senate if we should adopt the report of the committee and pass the pending bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia a question. Whether the bill as reported from the committee, containing the date June 30, 1939, should be enacted, or whether the amendment making the date June 30, 1938, should be agreed to and the bill, as thus amended, enacted, would such action interfere in any way with any reorganization plan, whether such plan be put into effect by the Congress or whether, in accordance with the President's request, the plan be carried out by the Executive by the authority of Congress?

Mr. GLASS. It would not interfere; and any subsequent legislation would supersede the present legislation. Any reorganization plan that might be presented and adopted by the Congress would wipe out the agencies for whose abolition provision was made.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. From his own experience, does my colleague think it would be less difficult to abolish an agency for which there is provided a definite time of termination or to abolish it during its tenure of life as fixed by the Congress?

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, if the Senator desires my private opinion, I think it is going to be difficult to abolish any of these agencies, for that matter; but I do not think it is going to be any more difficult after the passage of the bill reported by the Banking and Currency Committee than it otherwise would be. I think the proposed action should not be taken as a precedent at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will it be any more difficult to include in any reorganization plan temporary agencies which have a definite life attached to them than to include those which have a permanent life, and are scattered all over the city of Washington and all over the country?

Mr. GLASS. I think not. If we are to have a real reorganization plan—and I wish to say that I would trust my colleague above anyone else I know to present a sensible reorganization plan—if we are to have a real reorganization plan, the passage of the pending bill will not affect it at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to know just how intimately the agencies which are covered by section 2 of the bill are associated with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in its administration.

Mr. GLASS. They are practically entirely within the jurisdiction of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, because the agencies cannot get any money unless the Reconstruction Finance Corporation loans them the money; and the R. F. C. is as rapidly as possible curtailing its loans to these agencies.

Mr. BORAH. I submit another question. The bill contains the following provision:

> That in order to facilitate the withdrawal of the credit activities of the Corporation when from time to time during such period the President finds, upon a report of the Board of Directors of the Corporation or otherwise, that credit for any class of borrowers to which the Corporation is authorized to lend is sufficiently available from private sources to meet legitimate demands upon fair terms and rates, the President may authorize the directors to suspend the exercise by the Corporation of any such lending authority for such time or times as he may deem advisable.

That provision, if availed of, would correspondingly reduce the activities of the agencies in question, would it not?

Mr. GLASS. Undoubtedly; and the President is also authorized by the existing law to abolish them at any time he wants to do so.

Mr. BORAH. I submit a third question. Am I to understand that the Senator contends that the passage of the bill under consideration would not embarrass in any way any program of reorganization which might be submitted either by the administration or by the committee of which the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is chairman?

Mr. GLASS. I cannot conceive that it would. It certainly is not intended to do so, and I think it will not do so. It certainly will not embarrass me hereafter. I shall vote as I please on the question of abolishing the other agencies.

Mr. BORAH. I should not want to cast any vote which would embarrass the free consideration of the program for reorganization.

Mr. GLASS. Of course, I should not want to do that, either. I am for reorganization; I am for reduction; I am for curtailing useless expenditures, and I did not favor those which have already been made.

Mr. BORAH. I feel that the bill under consideration in and of itself is necessary, but I shall vote for it with the understanding that it will not embarrass my entire freedom in dealing with the subject of reorganization.

Mr. GLASS subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, immediately following my remarks, a letter from Mr. Jesse H. Jones, Chairman of the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, relating to the activities of that Corporation.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, January 15, 1937.

Hon. CARTER GLASS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR GLASS: To bring to your attention and that of the United States Senate a more recent account of the activities of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, beg to advise that our total loan authorizations, independent of allocations to other governmental agencies and for relief by direction of Congress, have been $8,574,260,051.01, which is made up of 34,000 separate loans and transactions.

$1,260,616,818.26 of these authorizations have been canceled, due in most cases to the fact that the applicants were able to get the funds elsewhere after the loans were authorized by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

We have actually disbursed $6,344,413,566.45. Of this amount, $4,374,347,801.83, or 69 percent, has been repaid, leaving a balance outstanding of $1,970,065,764.62.

We have outstanding commitments at this time of $969,229,666.30, but much of this will not be used, due in large measure to the fact that it is available.

Our total authorizations included $1,259,531,619.41 for capital investments in 6,858 banks. Of this amount $110,575,785.77 has been canceled, the banks finding that due to recovery the funds were not needed.

We have actually disbursed $1,050,767,103.23 for the purchase of preferred stock, capital notes, and debentures in 6,091 banks. Of this bank capital investment $402,715,377.58 has been repaid. Seven hundred and fourteen banks have retired their capital entirely, leaving 5,377 banks in which we still have capital investments aggregating $648,051,725.65.

Our policy for the past year or more has been to assist and encourage applicants in getting their loans from private sources where possible rather than by making them ourselves. The fact that we are in a position to make the loans enables us to do this, in many cases.

We are liquidating as rapidly as is consistent with the best interests of our borrowers, and the best interest of the country. Our bill is drawn with this in view.

During the year 1936, except for funds advanced to other governmental agencies and for relief, our collections exceeded loans disbursed by $736,000,000.

We have operated at a total expense of approximately one-half of 1 percent per annum.

We have paid the Treasury $190,732,868.24 for the money we have borrowed from it.

After the payment of interest and all expenses, our operating surplus from loans and investments authorized by our directors, giving effect to accrued interest receivable and payable, is $150,702,834.07. Of this earned surplus $114,400,000 has already been collected.

This $150,702,834.07 will more than cover such individual losses as we will naturally have in so large an operation.

Very truly yours,

JESSE H. JONES, Chairman.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

Mr. BYRD. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. GLASS (after having voted in the negative). I inadvertently voted. I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and therefore withdraw my vote. I am not advised how the Senator from Minnesota would vote if present.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] has a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I am not advised as to how either Senator would vote if present.

I further announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained in connection with important committee meetings.

Mr. MCNARY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is absent on account of illness in his family. His general pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] has been announced.

I further announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO]. I am not advised how the Senator from Vermont would vote if present.

The senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent on account of illness. He has a general pair, as stated heretofore, with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am not advised how the Senator from Minnesota would vote if present.

So Mr. BYRD's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If no further amendment be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. ROBINSON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GLASS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MINTON. I reannounce the general pair of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I also announce that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] are detained by important committee meetings.

Mr. MCNARY. I make the following announcements:

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] has a general pair with the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO].

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] is absent due to illness in his family. His general pair has been announced.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent because of illness. His general pair has also been announced.

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote if present.

EXPEDITION OF APPEALS FROM INJUNCTIONS AND RESTRAINING ORDERS

Mr. BLACK. Out of order, I introduce a bill and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received.

The bill (S. 877) providing for appeals from orders of Federal courts prohibiting compliance with Federal laws was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent to speak briefly on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the bill just introduced by me is identical with the one I offered at the last session of Congress with reference to expedition of action on cases by the Supreme Court of the United States. I call especial attention to the bill, and I should like to express the fervent hope that the Judiciary Committee will take some action in connection with this matter, whether or not by the particular method proposed.

What I suggest by the bill is that, within 10 days from the time that an appeal shall be taken from an injunction or restraining order issued by any court of the United States, the entire record shall be transmitted to the Supreme Court of the United States. In other words, the bill, if enacted, would require expedition in connection with the Supreme Court's final determination on injunctions or restraining orders which prevent the enforcement of a Federal law. I believe that on that one ground, perhaps, all the people will agree.

I call particular attention also to the fact that at the present time the Tennessee Valley Authority is specifically restrained from practically any and all action until a restraining order shall be finally acted upon by a judge, and perhaps until it shall reach its devious way on up to the Supreme Court of the United States. As a result, numerous municipalities are deprived of the privilege of obtaining loans provided by the Government and are likewise deprived of the privilege of operating their own municipal plants.

There is no question raised by the bill as to the controversial issue of the right of the Supreme Court to declare laws unconstitutional. It is an effort, however, to bring about immediate action by the Supreme Court when laws affecting 128,000,000 people are suspended by injunctive process or by restraining orders of an inferior court. The bill, if enacted, would obviate waiting until a case could go through the circuit court of appeals. It would obviate the Supreme Court being required to send the entire case back to the lower court because the record was not properly made. In other words, the bill would require a stenographic transcript of the entire record, with every word appearing in the record which justified granting the restraining order or injunction by the lower court, to be filed in the Supreme Court.

Senators will recall that recently a case from North Carolina, as I remember, was sent back to the lower court because of the fact that the record was not complete. My bill would require the entire record to go to the Supreme Court.

Under the present proceeding in the case just mentioned the case would go back to the North Carolina district court. Then it would pursue its tedious way to the circuit court of appeals. Perhaps finally within a year it might reach the Supreme Court of the United States. The Court may at that time hold that the law was constitutional all the time, and that the municipalities were entitled to receive the benefit of the loans provided by governmental action. If the Supreme Court should so decide, it would mean that for a year or more the law had been rendered absolutely ineffective and had been nullified by action of the lower court.

I invite particular attention to the fact that in the bill no controversial issue is raised with reference to the rights of the lower court or the rights of the Supreme Court of the United States, but it is based upon the belief that if the courts are to continue to have the authority to enjoin and restrain laws affecting 128,000,000 people it must be done with expedition, and it must be done with such expedition that the rights of the people shall not be taken away from them any longer than is necessary.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Referring to a case recently decided at Nashville, in which an injunction was granted, under the provisions of the Senator's bill would such a case be appealed immediately and directly to the Supreme Court of the United States, not going to the circuit court of appeals at all? Secondly, how long would it take under the provisions of the Senator's bill?

Mr. BLACK. My bill provides that its terms shall apply to restraining orders, judgments, decrees, and injunctions in all cases already issued and hereafter to be issued. If the United States Government should give notice of appeal directly to the Supreme Court of the United States, the court in Tennessee would be required to send the entire record within 10 days to the Supreme Court of the United States. The record would have to arrive at the Supreme Court of the United States within 10 days. Then the case would have a preferential status in the Supreme Court.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. Has the Senator considered that in many cases there would be an utter impossibility of getting the entire record prepared in 10 days? If it should be confined to 10 days I think I know, from my experience as a lawyer and a judge, that cases would be found in which the record could not be transcribed at all in time to present the matter to the Supreme Court within 10 days.

Mr. BLACK. If 10 days is too short a time, it could be made 12 days or 15 or 20 or 25 or 30 days. In the main it is my judgment, from 20 years' experience and practice, which is not so broad as that of the Senator from Kentucky, because he has also been on the bench and rendered distinguished service, that in the matter of restraining orders and injunctions 10 days would be adequate time. There might be some cases in which 10 days would not be sufficient time.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator is speaking of a temporary injunction or restraining order, that might be true; but if the injunction were granted as the final judgment of the court, it might take a longer time to prepare the record unless there was some provision that the evidence relating only to the question of injunction should be carried up and not the entire record.

Mr. BLACK. It might be wise to incorporate some such provision. May I say I have no doubt that the combined wisdom and experience of the members of the Judiciary Committee are such as to enable them to suggest many helpful and perhaps necessary amendments to the bill which I am introducing.

Mr. LOGAN. I may say to the Senator that in my State, in cases where an injunction is granted, we may go to our highest court or to one of the judges thereof and move to vacate the injunction or the restraining order. However, the provision is that the original order may be taken up in order to expedite the matter. I suggest to the Senator that perhaps it might be necessary to have the original record, rather than a transcript of the record, transmitted to the Supreme Court, and then returned to the lower court after the Supreme Court had finished with the record.

Mr. BLACK. That might be an excellent idea. I am delighted that the Senator is a member of the Judiciary Committee, because of his vast experience and because I know that his experience is such that he is bound to be led to the conclusion that whatever may be the result hereafter with reference to a pending controversy, expedition in decision is essential.

Mr. LOGAN. It is absolutely necessary.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not read the Senator's bill. As I understand, it would not require the Court to render an opinion within any specified time, but merely would require that the record shall be before the Court within 10 days?

Mr. BLACK. It would require the record to be placed before the Supreme Court within 10 days, and then that the case so appealed to the Supreme Court should be given preferential consideration over all other causes not of a like nature.

The idea I have in mind is that we have reached a condition in the United States where no law is final until the Supreme Court has passed upon it. No law is final, according to the belief of many, until the Supreme Court has passed upon the policy involved and determined, whether or not the Supreme Court believes Congress should have enacted the legislation. Whether that conclusion is correct or not is immaterial to this proposal. For instance, when the enforcement of the A. A. A. law was restrained, hundreds of suits were filed all over the United States. These required the time of the Attorney General's office, the judges, the clerks, and thousands and thousands of dollars were spent in these lawsuits to determine the constitutionality of the law. If there had been a method of speedy determination provided, that long delay and unnecessary expense would have been obviated.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. It seems to me some law of the kind now proposed is necessary. In a recent case at Nashville the bond required was probably not one-fifth as much as the probable loss which would be brought about by stopping the entire work of the T. V. A.

Mr. BLACK. No one can determine the loss to the people which is involved in restraining the T. V. A. activity.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is almost impossible to determine, and therefore it seems to me that if a plan could be worked out to bring about a speedy hearing on appeal in cases where preliminary injunctions have been issued against the enforcement of acts of Congress, it would be exceedingly wise to enact it into law.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wish to say to the Senator, preliminarily, that I am very sympathetic with the general spirit of his bill; but I am impressed by the fact that in working out a measure of this kind something must be considered in the way of differentiation as to the order and the subject matter from which an appeal is taken.

For instance, if it is an appeal from a temporary restraining order or a temporary injunction—heard perhaps in chambers, as many of them are—then I think the Senator's 10-day provision may be ample; but if it is an appeal taken from an injunction rendered at the conclusion of a hearing which of itself may have covered months of time, then I am afraid that the Senator's 10-day period will be too short. I think a differentiation should be injected into the bill to the effect that in the case of a restraining order from a certain proceeding, then a certain limitation should be made. In the case of a restraining order issued after a different proceeding, then a different limitation may be necessary; but, as a whole, the spirit of the bill and its intendment seem to me to be justifiable.

Mr. BLACK. I appreciate the Senator's suggestion; and something of that kind may be worked out in the committee. Another thing that may be done is that a provision may be incorporated in the bill to the effect that within 10 days a notice should come up and a reason should be given as to why the matter could not be completed within the 10 days, and a certain number of other days added. What I desire is that when the enforcement of laws affecting the 128,000,000 people of the United States is restrained, if the right is to continue to exist on the part of a court to take such action, it should be done immediately without injuring the people.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator has not asked for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. He is asking its reference to a committee, where the details of the proposed legislation, if the committee thinks its fundamental purpose is meritorious, may be worked out.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I agree with the statements which have been made here that in some instances the limitation of 10 days might impose impossibilities on the lower courts. What the Senator desires to do, as I understand, is to assure prompt action upon the one question as to whether a given act is constitutional by the authority that would finally determine it, and the authority which under present conditions sometimes does not reach a conclusion until years have elapsed.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct; and I was simply calling the matter to the attention of the committee because I thought it might be better to do so in the open session of the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I have listened with interest, as I always do, to all the able Senator from Alabama has said. In my judgment, the Senator long ago earned for himself a place on the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. To my regret, for reasons best known to the Senator, he has thus far not seen fit to accept membership on the committee. I assure him that the committee will be glad to invite him before the appropriate subcommittee which will consider his bill.

I am sure that the observation made by the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], and supplemented by the able Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], that in certain instances the 10-day period might be altogether too short, if not impossible of compliance, is well founded.

While I feel that no assurance is necessary, I rise to say that, so far as my humble efforts may be concerned, the Judiciary Committee will give to this bill a close examination. I am assuming that it is the same, not in haec verba but the same bill in purport, as the bill introduced by the Senator in the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Mr. BLACK. I may say to the Senator that it is the same bill which the Supreme Court opposed.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Supreme Court, upon invitation, sent to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary a committee of its members opposing the proposed legislation, not because the Supreme Court thought it inexpedient but, on the contrary, because, as its committee said, the provisions of the bill were now in effect the law. Many times in public life our faces grow red, and the Judiciary Committee did not wish its countenance to turn crimson by bringing in a bill proposing to legislate upon a subject as to which the Supreme Court of the United States has said, "That is now in effect the law." If that is not the law, however, I wish to associate myself with the able Senator from Alabama and say that some measure such as he has suggested ought to be the law, because, if the constitutionality of bills passed by Congress is challenged, no coherent man will say that the courts should take an unduly long time to determine the question. So I shall support any sensible and practical method which does not involve undue haste.

I beg the able Senator from Alabama to believe that at a most early date he will receive an invitation to appear before the subcommittee on the bill introduced by him.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I had not intended to speak further, but, in view of the Senator's statement, I wish to say that the Supreme Court sent before the Judiciary Committee a committee whose members took the position that under rules now in effect sufficient expedition could be achieved. They did that by reason of the fact that it was stated that a motion could be made by the Government to bring a case directly from the lower court to the Supreme Court of the United States, and that in important cases the motion would be granted.

Unfortunately, since that time there have been two separate instances which have demonstrated to me that the Government does not have the right that it should have to expedite decisions. The first was the Tennessee Valley Authority case from North Carolina, where the Supreme Court sent the case back to North Carolina because of the fact that the record was not complete. This bill requires a completion of the record.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a further interruption?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Obviously the Supreme Court could not do anything else if the entire record was not before them.

Mr. BLACK. I am not criticizing the Court on account of sending back the case.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator criticizes the delay incident to these transfers and removals, and argues, ably, that if all the original papers could be sent to the Supreme Court there would not arise the delay occasioned by the failure of the district court to send up all the papers.

Mr. BLACK. If that had been done, this particular case would not have been sent back.

Secondly, while I cannot recall the exact title of the case, I know that a week or two ago the newspapers carried information to the effect that a motion had been made to bring up to the Supreme Court an attack on the Social Security Act, obviating the necessity of going through the circuit court of appeals. The Supreme Court denied the motion. That requires, therefore, that the case shall go through the circuit court of appeals. In my State injunctions have been issued which have held up the collection of funds. We have been endeavoring to reach some kind of a conclusion or agreement which would permit the money to be paid to the various States. Six thousand complainants, as I recall, or some large number—it may not be 6,000, but a large number of complainants—are interested in that suit. This bill would prevent the denial of considering an appeal directly in the Supreme Court until it could be considered by the circuit court of appeals.

I shall be happy to go before the Judiciary Committee any day from now on to present the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] (S. 877) will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRINTING OF ILLUSTRATIONS, ETC., IN GOVERNMENT REPORTS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution and desire to make a very brief explanation of it.

We were discussing this afternoon some of the relative problems of economy. This is a small matter, perhaps, yet it can be the seed of a very large menace unless appropriate controls are created. I am speaking as a member of the Senate Committee on Printing and of the Joint Congressional Committee on Printing. That will explain my interest.

The average annual report made by the ordinary governmental department is typified by the document I hold in my hand, which is the report of the Federal Trade Commission and which costs 34 cents a copy to print. Here is a new type of annual report, Mr. President, the annual report of the Resettlement Administration. It contains the same number of pages, but it costs $1.07 per copy; and the bill, incidentally, is paid from relief funds, less the proceeds of sale on a portion of the edition. I am sure Senators are familiar with it. It is a very beautiful piece of work. It is a triumph in typography, with all its magnificent color work and all its artistic maps and illustrations. In fact, I never have seen finer salesmanship or propaganda in my life. But this happens to be at the net expense of relief funds, and finally at the expense of the public. The report costs $1.07 a copy and sells for 40 cents from the Superintendent of Documents. Why, Mr. President, some of it is so extraordinary that it could not even be handled in the Government Printing Office. It had to be sent outside. All of the valuable information in it could have been made available to Congress in an ordinary report at ordinary cost. But the Resettlement Administration, alone among governmental agencies, required these embellishments.

That would not be so bad, except that the newspapers say that this has immediately excited the jealousy of all the hundreds of other departments and bureaus of the Government. Naturally they do not wish to be outdone in this new field of bureaucratic promotion. I quote from the contemporary press:

> Other Government departments are jealous of the R. R. A. report. More than one information chief has been called in by his department head and told, in effect, "If Tugwell could do this, why cannot we?"

I think I am entitled to say that the Public Printer may find himself considerably embarrassed by this movement. If every department of the Government shall finally print reports at the rate of anything like $1.07 per copy hereafter, the Budget will not be balanced within the life of any Member of this body. But if this sort of expensive propaganda—all charged to the taxpayer—is permitted for one, it will have to be condoned for all.

I am introducing a joint resolution which simply requires that when anything by way of illustrations, pictures, or color printing is requested of the Public Printer in respect to annual reports hereafter, the request shall be referred to the Joint Congressional Committee on Printing for approval before it can take effect. Thus we may have some semblance of a check on these extravagances and upon these departmental press agents and promoters. Thus, also, we may establish uniformity.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, has the Senator the figures as to the total cost of printing the report to which he has referred, namely, the report of the Resettlement Administration?
